How Peck Figured the Rate.

(Toledo Blade.)

When Governor Peck of Wisconsin was publishing the Sun at La Crosse, Wis., Sells' circus came to town. The press agent was Charley Scott, big, bluff and acutely sensitive to a humorous situation. He paid a visit to the Sun office and, meeting Peck, said:

"We want a two-column ad in your paper."

"All right, you can have the sapce," was the reply.

"How much will it cost?"

"Just $63.50."

"Well, we must economize some, and perhaps I can get along with less space."

"All right."

"What will one column cost?"

"Cost you $63.50."

"But that's only half as much as the two-column ad."

"I know it, but it will cost you just the same," said Peck.

"What the devil do you mean by charging the same for one column as you do for two?"

"Well, I'll tell you," said Peck, with a genial grin. "The circus will be here the 17th, and the 18th I must meet a draft for paper for $63.50, and your old circus is a godsend. Your ad will just meet that draft."

"I'll be hanged," ejaculated the astonished Scott. Then, the humor of the situation catching him, he added:

"But I'll take the two columns."

Getting Back at Whistler.

(Collier's Weekly.)

The late James McNeil Whistler had a French poodle of which he was extravagantly fond. This poodle was seized with an affection of the throat, and Whistler had the audacity to send for the great throat specialist, Mackenzie.

Sir Morell, when he saw that he had been called in to treat a dog, didn't like it much, it was plain. But he said nothing. He prescribed, pocketed a big fee and drove away.

The next day he sent post haste for Whistler, and Whistler, thinking he was summoned on some matter connected with his beloved dog, dropped his work and rushed like the wind to Mackenzie's.

On his arrival, Sir Morrell said gravely: "How do you do, Mr. Whistler? I wanted to see you about having my front door painted."
