STORM WARNINGS SAVE MUCH PROPERTY IN SOUTH

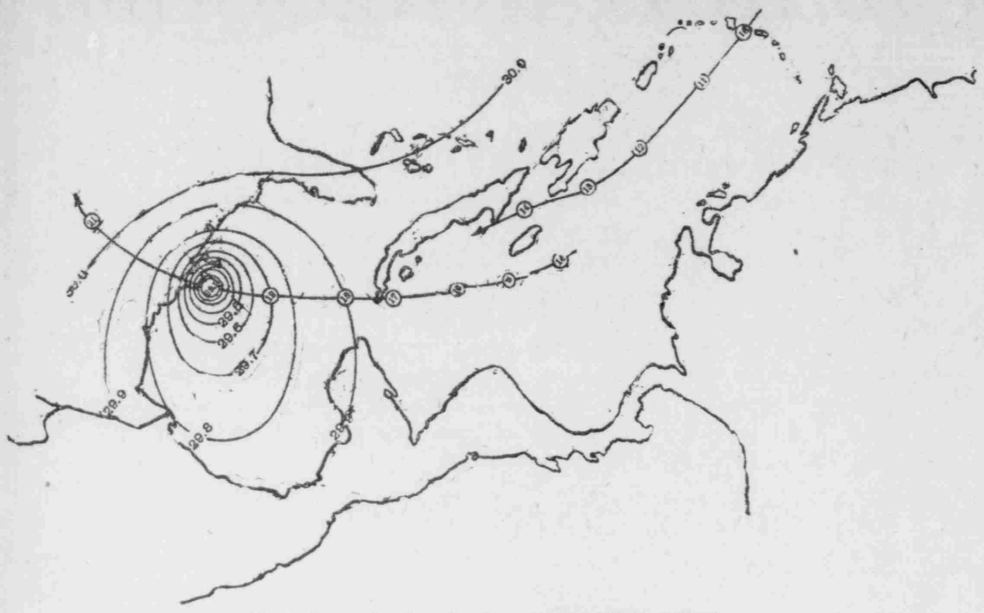

Chart sh owing how hurricane entered Gulf of Mexico.

Attention is called to the great West India hurricane of Sept. 17-21. The map printed shows the progress of the storm which, on Sept. 20, was almost directly over New Orleans, La. The path of the center of the storm is shown by the curved line with the dates 14 to 21 marked on it. The nearly circular lines show the distribution of the barometric pressure on the 20th, the lowest reading being about 29.1 inches of mercury.

This is very low when one considers that 30.00 inches is normal. The winds in this storm very nearly followed the nearly circular lines, blowing in an anti-clockwise direction, that is, opposite to the way the sun moves. The effect, then, would be a vortex, the wind blowing very strong, reaching hurricane velocity near the center of the storm, and diminishing as one goes from the center.—Alfred Thiessen, director of weather bureau of Salt Lake.

The weather bureau reports on the West India hurricane of Sept. 17-21:

"During the present summer barometric conditions have been particularly favorable to the development of disturbances in the West Indian region.

"This storm apparently had its inception near the middle islands of the Lesser Antilles on Sept. 12 and moved thence westward over the Caribbean sea without evidence of marked intensity until Sept. 14. On that date two centers of cyclonic action appeared, one north and the other south of the island of Jamaica.

"On the morning of the 17th the hurricane was central near the western extremity of Cuba, and the station at Pinar del Rio showed a barometric pressure of 29.44 inches, a twenty-four-hour rainfall of 7.88 inches and a wind velocity of 60 miles an hour from the northeast. Advices were issued at that time to Atlantic and Gulf shipping interests and ports that the hurricane center would probably move northward over the Gulf of Mexico and that vessels in extreme south Atlantic and Gulf ports and also those that were preparing to sail for those waters, should remain in port.

"The hurricane center moved northwestward over the Gulf of Mexico and reports on Sept. 19 indicated its approach toward the middle Gulf coast. Storm warnings were ordered along the coast from eastern Texas to western Florida and the usual information regarding the location and course of the storm was telegraphed to Atlantic and Gulf ports. Sept. 19 the storm warnings were changed to hurricane warnings on the Louisiana coast. On the morning of the 20th the vortex of the storm had reached a point near the mouth of the Mississippi river with approximate central pressure about 29.00 inches. Its announced movement from that position was northward over Louisiana. At 8 p. m. of Sept. 20 the hurricane was apparently central somewhere to the westward of New Orleans, La., with barometric pressure at that station 29.22 inches, with torrential rains and wind from the southeast that attained an extreme velocity of 68 miles an hour. From this position its announced course was northward up the Mississippi valley. At 3 a. m. of Sept. 21 the storm center was near and west of Vicksburg, Miss., the pressure at that station being 29.06 inches. By the morning of the 21st it had reached southeastern Arkansas, with lowest reported pressure at Little Rock, Ark., of 29.34 inches, and by the morning of Sept. 22 it had crossed the western lake region with a marked decrease in strength.

"Advices from New Orleans state that the total property damage in that city was, so far as reported, nearly $1,000,000, that many lives had been lost in Louisiana, and that it was not possible to get information from sections where the damage was believed to be heavy. At Mobile, Ala., the tide in the Mobile river overflowed two or three blocks inland, and minor damage only was caused to vessels in the harbor. The observer further states that, owing to the timely warnings, probably all merchandise was protected. At Pensacola, Fla., large quantities of timber, barges, small schooners and launches were sunk or carried ashore, and small wharves and boathouses were demolished.

"Later reports will show aggregate losses of life and property, the extent to which the warnings governed the movements of shipping, and the approximate saving of life and property through measures that were prompted by the very ample and accurate advices that were issued by the weather bureau."

THE RETORT TART.

(Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.)

Rose O'Neil, artist and author of "The Lady in the White Veil," is personally noted for a charming readiness of speech, and every woman knows what a very present help that is in time of trouble. Shortly after the young American first went to London—and her friends are delighted to tell the story—she met an Englishman who prided himself on his brusque speeches, and who had heard quite enough, apparently, about the young visitor's talents and charm. Turning to her, he said, in a thundering voice that might have been an echo of Dr. Johnson's, "If you are the cleverest woman in America, how long will you last in England?"

"Conundrums?" she rejoined. "If you are the rudest man in England, how long would you last in America?"

"Ah," exclaimed one listener, delightedly; "'tis because she has the Irish in her name, and the Irish have the way with them!"

TRUE ELOQUENCE.

(The Green Bag.)

The lawyer for the plaintiff had finished his argument and the counsel for the defense stepped forward to speak. The judge, new to the bench and young for his position, interrupted him. His eyes were wide open and filled with wonder and admiration for the eloquent plea of the plaintiff.

"Defendant need not speak," he said; "plaintiff wins."

"But, your honor," said the attorney for the defendant, "at least let me present my case."

"Well, go ahead," said the judge wearily.

The lawyer went ahead. When he had finished the judge gaped in even greater astonishment.

"Do't it beat all!" he exclaimed. "Now defendant wins!"

LEAVING DESKS FOR THE COUNTRY

Indications of Reaction From Overcrowding in the Big Cities.

Chicago, Oct. 8.—Has the stupendous growth of urban population in the United States at the expense of rural reached the turning point? When Washington was president only 3.4 per cent of the 4,000,000 people were in cities; today at least 35 per cent of Uncle Sam's 90,000,000 are in cities. But an era of change is noted the country over; the overcrowded cities are sending forth armies of people as settlers to the "new country," the rural life again is potent.

"The cities are overcrowded; the reaction has begun," declares Herbert Kaufman. "A new America is in the making. The next ten years will see a century of progress squeezed into a decade. Cost of living has so increased—the struggle and the striving and the back-break and the heartache, for the right to exist, have bred a revolution.

"The great chances no longer lie among the crowds, but where the crowds are in the making. America has become land-mad—the sanest madness that ever stirred a people. Men are leaving spots where building lots are sold by the foot and are bringing the same price into country where it will command acres—where they can live in the open—where there are no fences to ambition—where they can plan a bigger future for themselves and for their children.

"The city dweller has awakened to the realization that he is entitled to more out of life than the mere right to exist through it. Competition for every post from entry clerk to factory foreman is so intense that his immediate earning powers are limited by the long string of men ahead, and his increases are controlled by a longer string of men behind who are willing to underbid for the bigger posts."

Figures tell how the urban population has grown since the days of Washington, how the crowding of the cities has gone on, the urban percentage of the total of 1790 having grown slowly from 3.4 to 6.7 per cent in 1830, when the United States boasted 12,866,020 people, to 16.1 per cent in 1860, to 20.9 per cent in 1870, and to 33.1 per cent in 1900, when population reached 75,468,000. From 130,000 people in cities in 1790, the urban residents have increased to 25,000,000 in 1900.

"There was never a time when a young man had less show in the old towns and where he had a bigger play for ability than he will find in the new irrigated and drained lands, and in the hitherto inaccessible ranch sections now available for culture, because coming of the railroads has made feasible their development," Mr. Kaufman continues in his review of the situation in the Woman's World. "The same opportunities which lay before the first settlers of Iowa and Kansas exist today in Florida, in Louisiana, in Texas, in New Mexico, in Oklahoma, in southern Missouri, in Arkansas, in southern Alabama, and in the superb orchard and grain countries of the northwest. The same chances without the same hardships and privations which the other generation underwent—crude transportation, a rude sod house, unutterable loneliness for the women, and years and years of uncertainty before the silver lining turned.

"This is another century, another era, and things are being done in another way. The railroad and the harvester, the needle and the thread of civilization, are stitching a new robe for prosperity. In their trail are merchant and builder. Wherever the smoke of a locomotive is seen, there follows the smoke of communities.

"The farmer's wife no longer lives in exile, starving for the sight of friends, with no recourse and no resource to break the blank, blind, lonely stretches. She does not feel the constant, haunting dread that one by one, with their maturity, her boys and girls will leave her side to seek a better and a bigger future in a distant town."

AN OMINOUS QUESTION.

(New York Tribune.)

At a luncheon the Italian prima donna, Mme. Cavalieri, described a French actress vividly.

"She is charming, but she is fickle," said Mme. Cavalieri. "On her wedding day—she is now divorced—her infatuated young husband bent over her and murmured fiercely:

"'The first time you deceive me I'll kill you!'

"She laughed softly, looking up into his somber eyes.

"'And the second time what will you do?' she said."

MUSTERING FOR THE BIG BATTLE

Friends and Enemies of Postal Savings Banks Show Great Activity.

Chicago, Oct. 8—New memberships received by the Postal Savings Bank league since the American Bankers' association declared open war upon the postal savings bank measure, indicate that the crucial fight in congress next winter between the banks against this measure and the people for it will find a formidable membership enlisted, to make organized, united demand for the enactment of the bill. Letters received from both men and women, inquiring how they can aid in the fight, show the public awake to the situation, growing indignant and ready to take up the gauge of battle thrown down by the money power.

In preparation for enrolling for a big public membership, the league headquarters will be removed from the First National bank building to the Rand, McNally building, Oct. 1. Assurances of co-operation and support are pouring in from important newspapers, magazines and other publications, and the centralization of public sentiment is urged by both Democratic and Republican forces. Campaign literature, speakers and documents are to be used.

In Chicago, the Tribune, Record-Herald and Examiner have taken up the fight vigorously. The Tribune in an editorial headed "Bankers, a Warning," has pointed out that the American Bankers' association should shrewdly heed the handwriting on the wall, and prepare gracefully to accept the action of congress, inevitable in response to a plain determination by the public; that opposition would breed a whirlwind.

The contention of the American Bankers' association that this governmental stimulus to the thrift of the nation "is uneconomic," has met a very chilly reception. The failure of the association to agree on a substitute provision of any kind has left the obvious need of an auxiliary to the present banking facilities unprovided for by the bankers. Even in the New England states, savings bank facilities are found unequal to the needs of the people who wish to save.

One investigator for the Postal Savings Bank league has reported that he finds Bristol, Me., with a population of 3,000 and ten postoffices. The nearest savings bank is twenty miles distant. There are 400 postoffices in Maine, but there are forty-two savings banks. In the towns and cities which have savings banks there are found to be only 250,000 of the 700,000 inhabitants of the state.

Mayor Edward W. Hooker of Hartford, has written to the league: "I do not agree with our savings bank officers that a national system of savings will hurt them in the least, but they seem to look at the matter in what to me is a selfish way, and feel that the postal savings bank would hurt their business. I earnestly hope that your efforts will be successful, as I believe the postal bank would be a great benefit to the entire country, and would in no way hurt the savings bank, but would also be a benefit to this institution."

A bulletin issued by the league over the signature of George H. Currier, chairman of the executive committee and the publisher of "Woman's World," the magazine of the largest circulation in the world, declares: "Not in years has there been an issue before the American people that was so clear cut as this, the people against the banks. We must organize; for united we stand, divided we fall, expresses the need in the face of the opposition."
