GARTH'S LAWYER MAKES DENIAL

Is Positive Business Troubles Did Not Drive the Wall Street Banker to Jump from Deck of Steamship Denver.

HE WORRIED ABOUT PERSONAL MATTERS.

If Relatives Keep on Declaring Dead Man Was Money-Mad Statement May Be Issued That Will Clear His Memory.

So far there has been no definite explanation of the real trouble that drove Granville W. Garth into a state of nervousness bordering on insanity, and led him to leap into the sea from the deck of the Mallory liner Denver.

There is a chance, however, that the whole truth will be told in a very few days. Friends and intimates of the dead banker are now solidly arrayed against members of the Garth family. From the latter come the statements that it was Mr. Garth's insatiable greed for money that worried him into distraction, and that it was the loss of a large fortune, which should have come into his wife's possession, that drove the banker out of town.

On the other hand, Mr. Garth's intimates, who were in his personal confidence, assert in most positive terms that it was not business worry that unbalanced his mind. Quite the contrary—it was entirely a personal trouble.

May Issue a Statement.

Adrian H. Larkin, of No. 54 Wall street, who was Mr. Garth's lawyer and personal friend, says that if the opportunity offers itself to tell the causes of Mr. Garth's suicide a statement will be issued.

"It is improbable, however," said Mr. Larkin, "that circumstances will permit that to be done. I am sorry that misleading statements have been made by some of the relatives of Mrs. Garth. There were no business troubles—absolutely none. Mr. Garth was under a terrible strain as a result of his personal trouble."

Mr. Larkin intimated that perhaps a statement would be issued after the arrival of Mr. Thomas Lawson in New York. Mr. Lawson, so Mr. Larkin intimates, has more information than he has yet revealed.

No statement has come from Mrs. Garth, widow of the suicide banker. It is said that Mrs. Garth has denied to her intimate friends that her husband's trouble resulted from anything other than business worry. She is also reported to have said that it was Mr. Garth who purchased the country place in New Jersey, hoping that outdoor life would benefit his health.

Herzog Wouldn't Discuss It.

Louis Herzog, Garth's brother-in-law, when seen at his studio in the Beaux Arts Building to-day, declined to discuss Mr. Larkin's statement.

"If there is any explanation of such a statement," he said, "it must come from the man who made it. I do not care to discuss Mr. Larkin's statement; in fact, I have nothing further to say about the case at all."

Mrs. Garth could not be seen at the Grenada to-day, but a friend who spoke for her said:

"Mrs. Garth is ill and can see no one. She is unable to make any statement just now. We have positive orders not to allow her to see any one."

Horsemen in this city say that Hubert Hartigan, once the Garth groom, is one of the finest riders of hunters in this country, and that his work won many blue ribbons for Mr. Garth. On Oct. 9 last, at the Morristown Horse Show, Hartigan was up on Scout, Mr. Garth's fine hunter, and won the blue ribbon for his employer. On Oct. 17, at the Fair Acres Driving Club, at Westfield, N. J., Hartigan won blue ribbons for Mr. Garth with both Scout and another hunter, Wanita. At the White Plains Horse Show, on Sept. 24, he also rode a number of winners for his employer.

Concerning the much talked of Erin Farm the following appeared in the Jerseyman when the place was sold:

"Thoddore Schmalholz has sold his farm near Monroe to Hubert M. Hartigan. The place comprises fifty-nine acres and has on it a large barn and a one-mile exercising track. The owner is a dealer in high-class horses, supplying some of the best stables in the land with their horses, and during the last horse show he managed the exhibit of the Erin stables. He has seventeen horses in town now and will increase the number to thirty. Mr. Hartigan comes of a family of horsemen. His family for years has supplied the English royalty with horses. His brother is known as the best steeplechase rider in England, and his mother and sister are expert horsewomen."

Check Drawn by Hartigan.

Mr. Schmalholz said yesterday that he received his money in a certified check drawn by Hartigan.

Those who knew Hartigan when he was employed in Durland's Riding Academy are amazed at his rapid rise in the world. They say that when Hartigan worked in Durland's he could neither read nor write. Hartigan has refused to make any explanation of where he got the money to pay for Erin Farm.

It is said that Mr. Garth was much opposed to the intention of his wife to take up her residence at the Woodward mansion on Jan. 1.

The directors of the Mechanics' National Bank met yesterday and, after adopting resolutions of regret and condolence adjourned without taking any action regarding Mr. Garth's successor. Flags were flown at half-mast over the Mechanics' Bank building and that of the City Trust Company, at 36 Wall street.

GALVESTON, Tex., Dec. 29.—Thomas Lawson, who was with Mr. Garth on the Denver, says that he believes that Mr. Garth suffered from incipient paresis.

"He had hallucinations," says Mr. Lawson. "He would imagine that his brain was diseased. He would imagine that he had lost everything in the world and talk in that strain until I cheered him up. Otherwise he appeared perfectly normal and sane."

Mr. Lawson said there were no papers among Mr. Garth's effects which would point to the cause of suicide.

Alexander E. Orr, Vice-President of the Mechanics' National Bank, who first gave out the statement that personal worries alone had driven Mr. Garth to suicide, said to-day that he was through discussing the death of Mr. Garth or the troubles responsible for it.

"My idea in saying on Saturday that personal worries were responsible for Mr. Garth's tragic end," he said, "was to ease the minds of the officials and depositors of our bank. They might very easily have worried over the situation had I done otherwise. I know what the personal trouble Mr. Garth had was, as he told me of it himself, but it was told in confidence and I have no right to reveal it."

FOOTLESS, FOUND STARVING IN FERRY

Victim of Railroad Accident at Bethlehem, Pa., Comes Here Looking for Work—Will Be Taken to Bellevue.

Vincent Parull, thirty-five years old, with both his feet cut off, was found to-day in the Liberty street ferry-house in need of food and clothing. The man was so plainly suffering from destitution that he was removed upon discovery to the Hudson Street Hospital.

Parull had both feet cut off in a railroad accident at Bethlehem, Pa., on Nov. 7. He was taken to St. Luke's Hospital, in that city, and this morning discharged as cured. Parull in his work at Bethlehem had made he acquaintance of some railroad men, and hey helped him to get to New York. He said that he was sure he could make some kind of a living here.

Parull arrived at the Jersey terminal without any mishap and managed to cross the river. When in New York he grew bewildered and crawled into the ferry-house, where he was ready to give up.

He will be taken to Bellevue and the charitable organizations of Bethlehem and this city notified of his extremity.

BURGLARS? NO, ICE ON THE ROOF

Banker Platt's Valet, Whose Sharp Ears Made Possible the Capture of "Gentleman George," Causes the Trouble.

Crackling ice on the tin roof of the house of Dallas B. Platt, a banker, of No. 24 Exchange place, who lives at No. 24 West Forty-eighth street, in the small hours of to-day aroused from slumber every one of the fashionable residents in the square bounded by Fifth and Sixth avenues, Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth streets, their menservants and serving maids, threw timid women into faints, made children scream, brought twenty reserves and a sergeant out of the East Fifty-first street station, and finally called down upon the head of Mr. Platt's valet the neighborhood's entire stock of curses and imprecations.

It was the same valet whose sharp ears heard the footsteps of Harry Brook, the daring burglar known as "Gentleman George," who is now serving twenty-three years in Sing Sing for a series of house thefts in that district last summer. The crook was trying to escape across the roofs of the houses in the Platt block. "Me man" pointed the fugitive out to the police, and "Gentleman George's" flight was stopped by a bullet from a cop's pistol. Ever since then this servant has slept with one eye and both ears open and believed himself to be a veritable Lecoque so far as the senses of hearing and seeing are concerned.

Shortly after 4 o'clock this morning a softening of the weather loosened the ice on the Platt tin roof. The valet's room is directly under the rafters and instantly he was sitting up in bed on the alert. The sound came nearer, then went further away, as if some one were walking back and forth. The listener was sure that it must be a burglar, for no respectable person could possibly be on a gentleman's roof at that hour.

Creeping stealthily downstairs the valet awoke Mr. Platt with the announcement, delivered in a hoarse, stagy whisper, that there were burglars on the roof. After he had left his room he had decided that there must be more than one.

Mr. Platt, with a recollection of "Gentleman George" bobbing up in his mind and trusting in his man, telephoned to Sergt. Hall at the East Fifty-first street police station.

"There are burglars on my roof," was all that the banker got a chance to say, after announcing who he was.

Five minutes later Hall and Policemen Daly, Lynch and Sullivan, leading fifteen reserves, were on the way, footing it hotly to No. 24 West Forty-eighth street. The banker and the valet were waiting for them, and the way to the roof was pointed out.

Of course, there were no burglars there, nor was the mark of a foot found in the sheeting of snow. But it would never do to throw down a valet who had heard a burglar once, so the guard was thrown around the entire block and four of the cops started on a roof-to-roof canvass. They didn't overlook a house nor neglect to tell any of the occupants that they were looking for burglars.

They carried pistols and nightsticks, and naturally the sight of the weapons and the appearance of the bluecoats at such an hour made women scream and youngsters howl. And they were after burglars! Oh, oh! That meant a fainting spell.

The crackling of the ice went merrily on and nervous people, aroused to the presence of the sound, were sure that an army of crooks was abroad. The forms of cops on different roofs darting hither and thither called forth hails and halts from each other and it's a wonder that some one wasn't shot accidentally.

Taken as a whole, every one had a delightful time for nearly two hours. So did Mr. Platt's valet when it was all over.

Muslin Underwear

Then and Now

The voice of the retailer is heard in the land proclaiming: "Sales of White Goods." Some of the sales are straight offerings, some are fakes, some are mixed fakes and honest facts.

When we set the pace in the first White Sales many years ago we little suspected the beginning of a great movement that would become a universal trade festival.

Originating with us experimentally, you—Our Public—have by your co-operation confirmed it as an institution. Unwittingly we have worried your wits in creating a case for your decision, and now you must act judicially in choosing between fact and fiction, real and sham. The task is an easy one for all who know WANAMAKER'S—it is easy for everybody who will receive our message with the faith that it deserves.

The Sale of White lives by right. It has a reason. Right white goods can by our methods be cheaply sold at our special semi-annual offerings.

Neither miracle nor freak, it is just the result of industry and sound practice. More real than if fire, flood, failure or foolishness had precipitated a mass of muslin underwear and other white goods upon us at values that were of extraordinary cheapness. Therefore, our statements being real and reasonable you should trust them.

The offering is big, broad, bountiful. It is splendidly arranged for easy buying on the First and Second floors. The Rotunda Balcony comes in splendidly now that building plans have reduced our floor space and over-crowded the old Stewart Store.
