RARE ORCHID IS DISCOVERED

Search of Half a Century Results in Finding of Beautiful Flower in Tibet

Special Dispatch to The Call.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Great excitement has been caused among orchid collectors by the information which has just come to light that a rare specimen whose habitat for nearly fifty years has been sought in vain has been rediscovered. The ecstatic joy with which the tidings have been received can be appreciated only by those who are devoted to this most fascinating of all forms of horticulture, but the story itself illustrating the romance that underlies the pursuit of these floral gems is of general interest.

There came to London in 1857 from India a miscellaneous stock of orchids. They were duly sold at auction and some of them were bought by a Mr. Fairlie of Liverpool. In his possession they bloomed, and one of them was recognized with rapture as a variety previously unknown and of singular beauty. It was named after its owner, Cyprihedium Fairieanum. The Indian collection contained several other specimens of the same plant and keen was the competition that ensued for their possession. But most of the purchasers simply wasted their money. The plants did not flourish. The original stock dwindled and died. For many years there has been only one specimen in existence among orchid collectors, and a diminutive one at that. But its possession has been sufficient to confer additional distinction on its distinguished owner, Sir Trevor Lawrence, the president of the Royal Horticultural Society. The aim of every orchid enthusiast is to get hold of an orchid that nobody else has. Sir Trevor has several times been offered big sums for his puny Fairieanum, but nothing could induce him to part with it.

Meanwhile India has been ransacked in vain by orchid hunters for other specimens of the plant. Scores of expeditions have gone in search of it. Not a few lives have been lost in the perilous quest. But the Fairieanum eluded everybody. The money that has been expended in abortive efforts to find it would represent a snug fortune.

The Tibet expedition, which sought to open up the forbidden land to the trade of India, brought back specimens of pretty nearly everything that could be obtained in that grim region. One member of the mission who was a botanist discovered a lot of orchids which were sent to Calcutta. From thence two of them were dispatched to Kew Gardens. One of them has just flowered and experts have pronounced it the long sought and rediscovered Fairieanum.

The Tibet find included over 200 specimens of the plant. The bulk of them are now on their way to London, where they will be sold at auction in a few weeks. They will undoubtedly fetch good prices, but single specimens will not sell for anything like the prices that would have been paid for them had there been, say, only half a dozen of them. It is rarity more than beauty that determines the value of orchids. Still, it is not likely that another consignment will be obtained from the native haunts of the plant for many years unless it should be found necessary to send another expedition to Tibet to scare the Russian bogey. Great as are the prizes of orchid hunting, they will hardly suffice to tempt private individuals to incur the frightful risks and hardships they would meet in Tibet.

It is not known that the original Fairieanums, that startled the orchid world fifty years ago, must have come from Tibet, though by what means they were obtained there is no record. It was the natural assumption that they had come from the warm regions of India that led to the failure of the efforts made to cultivate them. The heat to which they were subjected killed them. It is probable that orchid growers will now be able to cultivate them with success. Anyhow Sir Trevor Lawrence will be deprived of his long-cherished distinction for some time to come at least.

The plant now in flower at Kew Gardens has five growths and two flowers. The flower has a slender, hairy scape about ten inches in height, a prominent and charming dorsal sepal one and three-quarter inches in breadth, with a white ground beautifully veined with violet purple, and with brownish-green veins near the center and whitish hairs around the margin.

The petals droop and have an upward curve at the tips. They are one and a half inches in length, with a white ground streaked with purple and yellow. The upper margin of the petals is much undulated and covered with prominent purple hairs. The pouch is rather small, greenish-brown in color, veined with brownish red and covered with short hairs.

Special Announcement.

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Ry. will run a popular excursion to the mountains on the Sierra Railway, Jamestown and Sonora, on Sunday, October 8. Special train will leave San Francisco and Oakland at 7:30 a. m. Fare $2 50 for the round trip. Full particulars of any Santa Fe Ticket Agent. •

WILD ANIMALS BLOCK STREETCAR TRAFFIC

DULUTH, Minn., Sept. 23.—Streetcar traffic on Woodland avenue was blocked last evening for a few minutes by six black bears. Incidentally eight or ten women were nearly frightened to death when the motorman brought the car to a sudden stop, raised the curtain and called the conductor that there were "bears on the track." The bears escaped.

PINS AND NAILS IN HER STOMACH

British Matron Swallows All Sorts of Drink to End a Life Full of Misery

Special Dispatch to The Call.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—At the Salop Infirmary a woman succumbed to an operation the other day which brought to light one of the strangest collections of miscellaneous objects that ever found lodgment in a human stomach. This is the list of them as catalogued by the surgeon who performed the operation: Thirty-two hairpins, 19 nails, 17 fragments of glass, 14 needles (darning and otherwise), 5 safety pins, 4 horseshoe nails, 4 screws, 2 coins, 2 pieces of chalk and 1 hook.

The woman, the wife of a poor man, was first admitted to the infirmary suffering from an injury to her thumb, which necessitated its amputation. She returned to her home much depressed in spirits and there her condition grew steadily worse. At last she acknowledged to her husband that some three weeks before she had begun swallowing various articles with the intention of putting an end to her existence. He had been such a good husband to her, she said, that she felt the least she could do for him was to relieve him of the burden of her support. Every time she swallowed one of the queer things, she said, she had hoped that death would speedily ensue, but after the hook failed to kill her she had been forced to the conclusion that she could not rid herself of life by such means. When she was again admitted to the infirmary it was found that in addition to the strange diet she had adopted she was suffering from an internal tumor. She died within a few hours after the operation had been performed.

Big Increase of Capital.
