ART STUDENTS WIN BY AID OF GIRL

Miss "Tuyd" Batdorf Invited Them to Her Studio After Their Suspension.

THEN STOOD AS MODEL.

Got News at Her Home that They Had Been Readmitted to Academy.

The strike is off.

What strike?

The art students' strike, and there is joy in a beautiful private studio at No. 117 West One Hundred and Thirty-seventh street.

The beautiful studio belongs to a beautiful young woman. She was to-day the centre of a group of animated students from the National Academy of Design, who had just received word that the faculty will suspend the one hundred and fifty men students, had reconsidered the matter, and that the students could report Monday morning.

The strikers are fifty girl students, and when the faculty suspended first the painting class, then the life class, and then all of the men students for painting a vermilion picture on the walls of the boys' smoking-room, all of the girl students refused to attend class until the young men were reinstated.

When the daubed affair of vermilion was discovered on the walls, Mr. Maynard, an instructor, went in to look at it, and found that paint had been put on the door knobs. He came away much the worse for the examination.

A Fairy Godmother.

Then followed the wholesale suspensions, and immediately there sprang up a fairy godmother for the students in the form of Miss "Tuyd" Batdorf.

"I was so indignant at the action against the boys that I decided something must be done," said Miss Batdorf, to an Evening World reporter to-day. "These art students are all hard workers and their studies mean everything to them. The loss of a week's work is disastrous to them. I invited them to come to my studio. I gladly posed them the first day. I would do anything to help them. Why, when I went to class Tuesday the place was so deserted I had to come away. The fifty girls who refused to return were very loyal.

"Why the daubing of that red paint on the walls was not done by any of our students. It must have been done by some rejected student or some really crazy person. No one in his senses would do such a ridiculous thing."

Miss Batdorf's studio covers the entire top floor of the Batdorf residence and is one of the finest private studios in New York. The young artist, who is an extremely beautiful girl, with big blue eyes, wavy brown hair and fine features, is possessed of rare ability.

"I did nothing unusual in asking the boys here," she said, "for I have everything convenient, and they have not. Some of these students come all the way from Texas and California, and are saving their money to make artists of themselves. It was only natural that I should turn over my studio to them."

Cheered for Miss Batdorf.

The thirty-five young men students who were busily working stopped long enough to give three cheers for Miss Batdorf.

"I don't know what we would have done without Miss Batdorf," said Harry Aronson. "She has saved the day for us. It is true we had decided to ask Andrew Carnegie to give us a building, and the fact the faculty has sent word that we are reinstated has not altered our plans at all. We students have sent a letter to Mr. Carnegie asking for a building and we hope that he will interest himself in our needs."

The feeling over the action of the faculty in suspending the students is so strong that the school looks forlorn and deserted. On the bulletin board to-day is a flaming poster put up by some of the girls: "Women's Seminary. Boys Wanted."

A new applicant called at the college to-day and was informed by one of the suspended students that the place was not an art school but a real estate office.

Among the students who were working in Miss Batdorf's studio are Alex Blum, Samuel Cahan, William Briethaupt, Joseph Farrell, Abraham Kroll, Alfred Johnson and Hamilton Wolf.

POLICE FEAR SYRIANS WILL FIGHT IN COURT.

Detectives on Guard, but Bishop Hawaweeny's Cohorts Are Peaceful.

The vicinity of the Butler Street Police Court, Brooklyn, this afternoon resembled an army post which expected an attack of the enemy. Bishop Raphael Hawaweeny, of the Syrian Church, was there to answer a charge of inciting a riot, but as his attorney, James W. Osborne, was not in court the case was postponed until Nov. 10.

Police Inspector Cross had been warned that a crowd of hostile Syrians would attend the hearing, so he sent many uniformed men and a score of heavily armed detectives. While there was a crowd of Syrians about the court no demonstration was made.

Attorney Le Barbiere applied for warrants charging the Bishop and fourteen of his supporters with conspiring to kill two of the opposing faction. He had affidavits that a spy was present at a meeting when $1,500 was given to two men to kill the two whose lives he said were sought. Magistrate Dooley took the affidavits under advisement.

SON'S STORY MAY SEND HIM TO CHAIR

Little Stephen Johnson Swears He Saw Papa Shoot Mamma.

(Special to The Evening World.)

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Oct. 27.—Former District-Attorney Andrews to-day began his defense of John Johnson, an ex-convict, who is on trial before Supreme Court Justice Keogh, charged with the murder of his wife, Katharine Johnson. The lawyer contends that Johnson never intended to kill, but that the revolver charge exploded accidentally.

Johnson had just been released from Sing Sing prison and told his wife he wanted to live a good life, but he says that she would not live with him because he had been a convict.

District-Attorney Young in presenting the State's case had read a confession of Johnson, which he made to the Yonkers police several hours after the shooting. In this confession Johnson is alleged to have said he asked his wife why she was treating him so mean, and she told him she would never treat him any better.

"I stood by her five minutes," said Johnson, according to the police, "and then the accident occurred. I shot her."

Johnson's nine-year-old son Stephen brought tears to the eyes of the many spectators in court while he was testifying against his father. The little fellow broke down and wept.

"I saw Papa shoot Mamma," he said.

The prisoner was almost overcome and tears rolled down his cheeks as he heard his son giving a description of the shooting.

MADE KISSES TO HER BY HIS HANDS.

Mrs. D. Schaetelbauer, a matronly widow of No. 415 East Fourteenth street, was complainant in the Yorkville Court to-day against Carl Hoffman, a middle-aged married man in the same house, who was arraigned on a summons. Mrs. Schaetelbauer said he had insulted her.

"What did he do?" asked Magistrate Finn.

"He makes kisses to me by his hands. My husband is dead," she replied.

Hoffman explained that the trouble was over a clothes-line, and while he did make motions they certainly were not kisses.

"Do you think it advisable for me to throw kisses when my wife is standing by?" asked Hoffman.

Magistrate Finn didn't think it was and dismissed the case, telling each to be good.

Just One More Day to Buy the Newest $1.50 Shirts at 69c.

Very High Grade—Colored Stiff Bosoms. Great Sale.

Most of these shirts bear the labels of the highest grade haberdashers throughout the United States, and are right up to the minute in both style and design. The fact of our owning them is this:

A haberdasher orders from a maker a hundred dozen shirts; the maker buys his cloth—enough to more than fill the order, making allowances for shrinkages of various kinds. When the job is finished, instead of being an even hundred dozen, there were several dozens over. And this is exactly what this sale consists of. Several makers have sold us their overstocks; an accumulation all told of something like Three Thousand Shirts. There isn't one in the lot worth less than $1.00. The major portion of them are genuine $1.50 shirts.

All splendid patterns—with detached cuffs; pleated and plain bosoms. With them are several hundred $1 cheviot negligee shirts in best patterns, with detached cuffs.

On special Counters—To-morrow at 69c. The Bargain of the Year.

$1.85 For Pure Silk Umbrellas

Men's and Women's; Worth $3.00

A good Umbrella of any sort is worth Three Dollars. But there is much trickery in Umbrella selling. Fancy handles are often used to distract the eye from inferior coverings and weak frames. This sale will help you to an ALL SILK Umbrella—GOOD all the way through—from handle to tip.

26 and 28 inch sizes. Of heavy sure twill silk (extra quality) in Black, Blue, Red and Green. Cases to match; also cord and tassel. Frames are the genuine Paragon—with steel rod and close rolling. Handles are of fine imported woods in large variety—with plain and silver mountings—all the latest crooks and bends.

You cannot duplicate them in any store for $3. We have sold hundreds exactly like these, at that price.
