KEANE NEVER SAID THE POPE WAS SICK MAN

Archbishop Tells of Religious Conditions of the Day in France.

France, and perhaps all the other Latin countries, is doomed to a generation at least of irreligion and anti-Christianity. This, in brief, is the message brought by Archbishop John J. Keane, head of the archdiocese of Dubuque, Iowa, who has just returned from France and is staying in New York for a few days before going home.

Archbishop Keane is the guest of the Paulist Fathers in West Fifty-ninth street. He has been in Germany for six weeks taking the baths for heart trouble. After the treatment he stayed several days in Paris, during which time he conversed with many churchmen and laymen. He is resting after his voyage and will start West on Friday.

A short, well set up man, whose quick movements and ruddy complexion would indicate an age much less than that told by the bald, dome-shaped forehead, Archbishop Keane, has all the magnetism of the natural orator. His kindly blue eyes behind large gold-rimmed spectacles brightened and flamed as he talked of conditions in France. But always his good humor caused him to round out his exposition with a touch that showed his unfailing belief that things will end well.

Never Said Pope Was Ill.

"There is one impression that I wish to correct," he said to an Evening World reporter to-day. "I have been quoted in the public press as saying that His Holiness Pope Pius is ill. I have never said that, for I know nothing about it. I have not been to Rome this summer, and all I have heard is to the effect that His Holiness is in good health.

"As for France," he went on, "I do not attribute the present persecution of the Church to Socialism. This is not a question of politics, but of religion. The spirit of Voltaire, the shadow of Voltaire, still clouds the country and that is the reason why the French government has broken the Concordat and driven the orders into exile.

"There is liable to be a misapprehension of the motives for the so-called separation of church and state there. The leaders of the French radicals now in power do not wish a separation in the sense it is understood here. They wish to exterminate religion. Voltaire said 'crush the monster' in referring to the Church. That is the plan of those in power.

Like Apostate's Madness.

"The spirit is not only anti-clerical, but, if the truth were known, anti-Christian. The majority in control of the Chamber of Deputies is actuated by the madness that swayed Julian the Apostate when he fell away from the faith and tried to stamp out Christianity in the Roman Empire. It will in the end be equally as ineffectual. We expect that the next generation in France will be irreligious or anti-Christian. Perhaps there will be two or three generations. Matthew Arnold has said that our generation has gone very far in the direction of materialism, but that there will be a reaction to the most extreme religious sentiment the world has ever seen. In a generaton or so France will have reached the limit of the material swing of the pendulum, then will come the return to the faith. The country will be more religious than it has been before."

French Bishops Heroes.

Asked as to what may be the decision of the French Bishops who are now in conference at Paris, he said, earnestly:

"That lies with God. They themselves are, I believe, as yet undecided. But a way will be found. This is the most important period in the history of French spiritual life. But those French clergymen will prove their native heroism. Of that I have no doubt. Look to a Frenchman for heroism and unflagging devotion to his cause. It has been said there are no Frenchmen in Purgatory—that they go either straight to Heaven or Hell, because they cannot strike a middle course of moderate Christianity. So while the anti-Christian forces are imbued with a sort of madness, they will be opposed by equally zealous champions of the Church."

Will the Girl Drop the Vase?

It is not at all probable that this experienced housemaid will damage even the finest of bric-a-brac. The reason is this: She secured her position through a World "Situations Wanted" Ad., which is proof enough that she was ANXIOUS to work.
