GREAT INVENTOR SAYS WAR HAS BROUGHT OUT NO NEW IDEAS

ITALY WAS SAVIOR TO CAUSE OF FRENCH ALLIES

FAMINES AND EPIDEMICS SCARCE IN PRESENT WAR, THANKS TO SCIENCE

(By Associated Press.)

Rome, Aug 9—No notable scientific discoveries or inventions are growing out of the great war, in the opinion of William Marconi, the wireless inventor. In an interview with a correspondent of the Associated Press he said:

"As for war inventions, on the sea there have been no great ones that occur to me. Most of them have been minor ones, or applications of knowledge previously at our disposal as in the case of poison gases, if these can be named at all. In my own field there has been some advance in one that wireless by which we are now able to direct the artillery fire of a ship by signals from an aeroplane which has been made possible largely through the big improvements in aircraft.

"The big lesson in Europe has been one of organization, of the physical handling of big material problems by the armies. I doubt if any one before this war ever realized the meaning and value of railroad transportation on a large scale, as it is practiced in the United States. Europe, too, has learned how to do big industrial jobs overnight, to assemble raw materials and run out needed factory products.

"I refuse to play the prophet role, so I would rather not say how many of these war products will be of use to us when peace comes."

Since the beginning of the war Mr. Marconi has had unusual opportunities for observing the practical side of the war, having early put his scientific knowledge at the service of his country. As a senator of the kingdom he has visited England, Belgium, Russia, and other countries, and investigated industrial and shipping reforms. In his capacity as military officer he has come into close relations with army and navy and given the benefit of his science and business organization knowledge to munition factories. He has also perfected the army and [illegible] wireless systems and is at present [illegible] signal system.
