SPORTING NEWS AND COMMENT

EDITED BY ROBERT EDGREN.

R. Edgren's COLUMN

EVIDENTLY Mr. Pulliam's objections to "making a slaughter-house" depend upon who makes it. Mr. Pulliam is importing a new umpire, who, he proudly explains, has the "slaughter-house" habit developed to such an extent that he is a terror to all the gluyers; he wallops them instantly if they chance to run counter to his authority.

IF Mr. Pulliam's introduction is meant as a joke, why, then, he is getting Umpire Rigler into hot water. All the McGraws and Pulizes in the league will be looking for his scalp. They'll camp on his trail.

Out West a few years ago it was a mighty dangerous thing to gain a reputation as a "bad man," because all the other bad men who wanted to add to their notoriety found that it stood at you. Rigler, coming on here heralded as a fighter, will be in the same fix.

NOLAN, Nelson's manager, is developing qualities that will make him even less popular among sporting men. His latest squeal is an accusation that Referee Siler was "fixed" and was paid to give the decision to Gans.

No man with any sense will be seriously agitated over Nolan's statement. I don't go out to Nevada to see the fight myself, but all accounts agree that Gans made a fearful mess of Nelson for forty-two rounds; that after the twentieth round Nelson butted, kicked, struck foul blows and did everything but bite; that the Dane was nearly blind and all in when he struck the last foul blow; that Siler would have been justified in disqualifying Nelson for fouling almost any time toward the end of the fight.

If Siler had been in any plot to give Gans the fight he would have decided against the Dane long before he did, and would not have taken chances of letting Gans be put out by a chance punch.

No, Nolan's squeal won't go. Gans has shown himself a better fighter than Nelson, and no amount of crying will restore Nelson's claim to the lightweight championship. Nolan made a mistake when he consented to a match between Nelson and Gans, but he won't improve matters now by trying to knock the winner. He'd do better to wait a year or so, until Joe gets a little stiff in the joints, and then try again. Nelson will be young enough. And Bat can go right on winning big purses in the mean time. Any lightweight who can give Gans a fight for forty-two rounds will be an attraction.

WHAT do you think of Sammy Berger's statement that he can whip Jeffries now "because Jeff would have to train down so far to get into condition that he'd be an easy mark?" That is what Jim Corbett thought two or three years ago. Corbett was mistaken. He found Jeff better than ever, and I dare say that Jim Jeffries, who is living a healthy outdoor life on his farm, in the finest climate in the world, hasn't gone back quite so far as some people think even now.

Even if Jeffries had gone back 50 per cent. he'd outclass Berger as far as he did Jack Munroe.

These young scrappers who have won two or three fights have the up-to-date habit of turning on the limelight and viewing themselves in the concave mirror which makes them look like real champions.

Everyone believes that Jeffries would be an easy mark for him is almost as good a joke as the Berger-O'Brien match "for the championship of the world." When Berger, Kaufmann, O'Brien, Burns and a few other heavyweights have settled the American championship Jeffries still stays in retirement; the winner will still have to beat the champions of England and Australia before he can claim world's honors. Jeffries was a real world's champion, because he took the title from Bob Fitzsimmons who had taken it from Jim Corbett, who had taken it from John L. Sullivan, who had taken it from the best fighters in America, Great Britain and Australia, the three fighting countries.

FIGHTING FACTS IN THE CAREER OF RIGLER

His Ability as an Umpire Was Not Taken Into Consideration.

Age—Thirty-three and three-quarters.
Height—5 feet 10 inches.
Build—Like brick tool-house.
Voice—Like honk-honk of New York auto.
Fight record—Knocked out Charles Hendricks in Central League in two innings, May 6.
Fought draw with Pitcher Williams, nine innings, June 20, 1906.
Knocked out by pop bottle in Wheeling, three innings, June 22, 1906.
Got decision on points over Jimmy Smith in seven innings, Central League, July 4.
Knocked out Third Baseman Edwards, four innings, Aug. 23, 1906.
Signed articles of agreement with Harry Pulliam to fight all rowdy ballplayers in National League, Sept. 5, 1906.
Facts about contest:
Place—National League.
Time—Any old afternoon.
Prize—Regular job and safe neck.
Rules—Pulliam Prize Ring Rules, allowing rough and tumble with both arms and feet free in clinch. Kicks in the shins permissible, provided they are not delivered by player.

"As far back as the days of Chaucer and Jim McGuire it has been proven that the only way to fight the devil is with fire," said Harry Pulliam as he deftly brushed an inquisitive mosquito from his silken, lavender-hued hose. "And that's the way I propose to do business in the National League."

Throwing a lace-work handkerchief over his white felt hat so as to produce a veil effect as well as to protect the delicate texture from the daily rain of ashes which follows the eruptions of the B. R. T. power-house in Brooklyn (Pulliam was at Washington Park at the time), the President of the National League continued. Of course he didn't say it all, but he looked like it was on his mind.

"For this reason I have secured the services of Charles Rigler, of the Central League, to act as umpire in my little organization.

"Though of gentle mind, he is built of steel wires with a scrap-iron filler; can whip his weight in wildcats, and on rainy days it takes a bale of hay to feed him. He eats fire, swallows tenpenny nails and drinks nitric acid to aid digestion. When he gets going it takes night to stop him and frequently he chews the boards off the grand stand when there are no players left on whom to vent his wrath.

"In Wheeling he ate part of the wire screen from the press box, but later found that it protected the inner man from highballs and he had to submit to an operation. And he didn't take an opiate at that.

"No player has yet disputed one of Rigler's decisions and got away without having his block knocked off.

"On one occasion at Wheeling, W. Va., a fellow named Hendricks averred that Rigler might have been misled into calling a certain strike. This audacity so enraged the umpire that in his haste to get a free movement of his biceps he ate the mask from off his face and then licked Hendricks in one inning before a crowd of 242 people.

"Ah!" exclaimed Mr. Pulliam, "as to his ability as an umpire—I hadn't thought of that. But what I want him for is to scrap.

"My literary works on the slaughter-house, which is now running as a companion piece to Upton Sinclair's 'Jungle,' has been so widely read that I want to make good.

"Of course," chirped the President, as he polished up one of the embroidered roses on his shirt front, and adjusted the mousseline de soie band about his chapeau (that's a good word, isn't it?), "I abhor slaughter-house tactics when engaged in by players, and I will stand for it not; but as to umpires what fight—that's different.

"I shall have a bottle-holder and towel-fanner at every game, to cool off Mr. Rigler between innings. I will match him against McGraw, McGinnity, Kid Elberfeld, Heinie Pietz, Hoke Ferris, Hayden, Sintelle or anybody who can make the weight, and who feels like starting something on a baseball diamond in America. I will also put up a little forfeit money to protect a side bet of a few franks."

So saying, Mr. Pulliam jaunty adjusted his cane to a symmetrical line with the crease in his trousers, and proceeded to his auto, which puffed and snorted impatiently on the outside.

This is the new umpire we are about to see, and to thoroughly introduce him Pulliam will have him work in New York, Brooklyn, Boston and Philadelphia, to get used to guess diamonds before going West.

He will begin work next week, but no definite date can be fixed until a contract has been made with the moving picture men.

NEW RULES WILL REVOLUTIONIZE GRIDIRON GAME

Shevlin, Yale's Captain, So Declares, and Predicts More Accidents.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 13.—Tom Shevlin, captain of Yale's football team last year, is afraid that the new rules will create havoc in the teams of the big universities.

"The new rules will revolutionize the game," he says. "There's no doubt about that. My idea of coaching, however, would be to build up the team with the old rules as a basis, adding instruction in the new rules after the team was grounded in instruction in the old, rather than to start a team trying to figure out the new rules.

"The new rules won't cut down accidents any. On the other hand, I expect to see more accidents than ever this fall. The rule allowing anybody to rush for a fumbled ball will be prolific of accidents, for it will mean that twenty-two players will be all throwing themselves on a fumbled ball or trying to kick it. Under the new rules, I look to see some well coached high school teams beat some big universities. It will be a year of football surprises, for about all of the elevens will start even."
