INSIDIOUS GOSSIPERS BLAMED BY M'DANIEL

St. Joseph Attorney Discusses Killing of Wife While Asking Votes.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Nov. 2.—Strange incidents and deaths which started as an undercurrent about town but which gathered vigor with each repetition until every people held an avenging finger was blamed for his misfortunes by Senator D. M. McDaniel, democratic attorney of Buchanan county, in an address here last night in the interest of his candidacy for re-election in which he discussed the murder of his wife last fall and his subsequent arrest, with great freedom. An audience which overflowed a local theater and responded to a series of traffic felicitous to applause interrupted him frequently with cheers, applause and words of encouragement of great velocity with him.

Friends Believed Tales

"Idle tales grew in intensity until my best friends believed them," Mr. McDaniel asserted. "People lost their reason. Detectives then appeared and my every act and word was distorted to suit their aspect of the case."

The prosecutor recounted the tales which he said had been circulated about him. Among them, he said, was the allegation that Mrs. McDaniel's diamonds had been found by detectives sewed up in his coat and another that Mrs. McDaniel, delirious in a hospital before she succumbed to her injuries, had cried:

"Oh, I can't! I can't! Oh, my God!"

Stories Declared False

These stories were brought to an end by the prosecutor, who said men charged with a malicious misrepresentation of truth, instead by his alleged victims.

McDaniel recently was put on trial charged with murder but the proceeding was halted on allegations that a special venire of talesmen had been influenced. His trial will be called again sometime this month, but not until after the election November 7.

ELECTION VIOLATORS WILL BE PROSECUTED

U. S. Attorney Gives Warning to Employers Who Intimidate Employes

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 2.—Frank C. Dailey, special assistant United States attorney, appointed recently to prosecute alleged election law violators in Ohio, Illinois and Indiana, issued a statement today warning men "who may have engaged in arrangements to threaten and intimidate employes in the matter of voting for federal officers that knowledge that their acts constitute a violation of the federal laws." The statement in part follows:

"Numerous reports have been made to us of employers to threaten and intimidate employes in voting, not for the benefit of the employe but as the employer desires. The reported intimidation has assumed various forms.

Asked to Join Clubs.

"It is claimed that for the purpose of intimidating a factory located in the Eighth congressional district of Indiana has caused letters to be written to employes notifying them to join a particular political club and to sign their names as members thereof. In another instance that certain employers will refuse to permit men who wish to vote for a particular candidate the privilege of a few hours off to vote, but if they wish to vote for the employers' choice they may have the time. It is further reported that for the purpose of intimidation one plant in northern Indiana has informed employes among other things, that is selected on election boards by a certain party they shall have the privilege of serving, but if selected by another party they are forbidden."

WHY I AM FOR WILSON

By Henry Ford

Automobile Manufacturer.

I'm for Wilson because he is "onto" the "interests"—the "unseen hands" that seek to control Government—and is holding them off. That he is "onto" them and is holding them off is proved by his refusal to rush into war with Mexico.

For purely business reasons the welfare of the country demands Wilson's re-election. I say—and I say from experience, not from guesswork — that the Eight-hour Law will help business. Business men and employers who are hostile to the eight-hour day do not know their business.

I'm for Wilson because I believe he can do more to enhance the prosperity and assure peace for this nation than any other candidate.

Y.M.-Y.W.C.A. Fund at Norman Growing

NORMAN, Okla., Nov. 2.—(Special.)—Students and professors of the University of Oklahoma and business men of Norman are confident that the Y. M. and the Y. W. C. A. are both worthy and profitable organizations. They had given a total of $1,894.90 toward the year's working budget of the two organizations at the end of the second day's campaign. The Christian associations have set out to raise $2,500 in six days.

For to-day it, together with an efficient organization, Frank D. Stover, secretary of the Y. M. and Eloise Eaglston, of the Y. W. C. A. have 178 men and women in the campaign, who meet for luncheon at noon each day and work for contributions at night.

During the first two days, the faculty subscribed $895, women students $250.50, men students $559, and business men in Norman $181. The whole need is divided into four divisions, in charge of Dr. H. C. Gossard, E. K. Witcher, Prof. H. H. Herbert and Dean Roy Gittinger.

RESERVE BANKS WILL INSURE UNITED STATES

Country's Financial System Will Be Sound When Conditions Become Normal.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—When conditions throughout the world approach normal the federal reserve banking system of the United States will be the most powerful agency in assuring to this country a sound financial system at home and in securing for the country its proper place in the realm of world finance, declared W. P. G. Harding of Birmingham, Ala., governor of the federal reserve board, in an address last night before a forum of the New York chapter of the American Institute of Banking.

Mobilization of the country's banking reserves by this system has not yet been fully accomplished, Mr. Harding said, but is approaching completion. The next instalment of reserves which is the last that will be obligatory and which will amount to $40,000,000, will be paid in on November 10, he said. This system, Mr. Harding asserted, has been established without even a seeming setback to the member banks out of whose resources a great reserve of $467,955,000 has been constructed.

THE ADVENTURES OF CONSTANCE DUNLAP

BY ARTHUR B. REEVE

This Week's Story:

"The Gamblers"

Next Week—"THE EAVESDROPPERS."

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

As she looked at the despairing woman, she could reconstruct the terrible situation. Cultivated, well-bred, fashionably gowned, a woman like Mrs. Noble served admirably the purpose of luring men on. If there had been only women or only men involved, it perhaps would not have been so bad. But there were both. Constance saw that men were wanted, men who could afford to lose not hundreds but thousands, men who are always the heaviest players. And so Mrs. Noble and other unfortunate women no doubt were sent out on Broadway to the cafes and restaurants, sent out even among those of their own social circle, always to lure men on, to involve themselves more and more in the web into which they had flown. Bella had hoped even to use Constance!

Mrs. Noble had paused again. There was evident sincerity in her as she looked deeply into the eyes of Constance.

Nothing but desperation could have wrung her inmost secrets from her to another woman.

"I saw them trying to throw you together with Haddon Halsey," she said, almost tragically. "It was I who introduced Haddon to them. I was to get a percentage of his losses to pay off my own—but—" her feelings seemed to overcome her and wildly, desperately, she added—"but I can't—I can't. I—I must rescue him. I must."

It was a strang situation. Constance reasoned it out quickly. What a wreck of life these two were making! Not only they were involved, but others who as yet knew nothing. Mrs. Noble's husband, the family of Halsey. She must help.

"Mrs. Noble," said Constance calmly, "can you trust me?"

She shot a quick glance at Constance. "Yes," she murmured.

"Then tonight visit Mrs. Le Mar as though nothing had happened. Meanwhile I will have thought out a plan."

It was late in the afternoon when Constance saw Halsey again, this time in his office, where he had been waiting impatiently for some word from her. The relief at seeing her showed only too plainly on his face.

"This inaction is killing me," he remarked huskily. "Has anything happened today?"

She said nothing about the visit of Mrs. Noble. Perhaps it was better that each should not know yet that the other was worried.

"Yes," she replied, "much has happened. I cannot tell you now. But tonight let us all go again as though nothing had occurred."

"They have $25,000 in stock certificates already which I have given them," he remarked anxiously.

"Some way—any way, you must get them back for a time. Let me see some of the blanks."

Halsey shut the door. From a secret drawer of his desk he drew a package of beautifully engraved paper.

Constance looked at it a moment. Then with a fountain pen, across the front of each, she made a few marks. Halsey looked on eagerly. As she handed them back to him not a sign showed on any part of them.

"You must tell them that there is something wrong with the others that you will give them other certificates of your own about which there is no question. Tell them anything to get them back. Here—take this other fountain pen, sign the new certificates with them in their presence so that they will suspect nothing. Tonight I shall expect you to play up to the limit, to play into Mrs. Noble's hand and assume her losses, too. I shall meet you there at 9."

Constance had laid her plans quickly. That night she waited in her own apartment until she heard Halsey enter across the hall. She had determined to give him plenty of time to obtain the old forged certificates and substitute for them the new forgeries.

Perhaps half an hour later she heard Mrs. Noble enter. As Constance followed her in the effusive greeting of Bella LeMar, showed that as yet she suspected nothing. A quick glance at Halsey brought an answering nod and an unconscious motion toward his pocket where he had stuffed the old certificates carelessly.

A moment later they had plunged into the game. The play that night was spirited. Soon the limit was the rule.

From the start things seemed to run against Halsey and Mrs. Noble even worse than before. At the same time fortune seemed to favor Constance. Again and again she won, until even Watson seemed to think there was something uncanny about it.

"Beginner's luck," remarked Bella with a forced laugh.

Still Constance won, not much, but steadily, though not enough to offset the larger winnings of Watson.

Fast and furious became the play and as steadily did it go against Halsey. Mrs. Noble retired, scarcely repressing the tears. Constance dropped out. Only Halsey and Watson remained, fighting as if it were a duel to the death.

"Please stop, Halsey," pleaded Mrs. Noble. "What is the use of tempting fortune?"

An insane half light seemed to glow in his eyes as, with a quick glance at Constance and a covert nod of approval from her, he forced a smile and playfully laid his finger on Mrs. Noble's lips.

"Double or quits, Watson," he cried. "Return the new certificates or take others for twice the amount. Are you game?"

"I'm on," agreed Watson coolly.

Halsey laid down his hand in triumph. "There were four kings."

"I win," ground out Watson viciously, as he tossed down four aces.

Constance was on her feet in a moment.

"You are a lot of cheats and swindlers," she cried, seizing the cards before any one could interfere.

Deftly she laid out the four aces beside the four deuces, the four kings beside the four queens. It was done so quickly that even Halsey, in his amazement, could find nothing to say. Mrs. Noble paled and was speechless. As for Bella and Watson, nothing could have aroused them more than the open charge that they were using false decks.

Yet never for a moment did Watson lose his iron cynicism.

"Prove it," he demanded. "As for Mr. Halsey, he may pay or I'll show the stock I already hold to the proper people."

Constance was facing Watson, as calm as he.

"Show it," she said quietly.

There was a knock at the door.

"Don't let any one in," ordered Bella of the maid, who had already opened the door.

A man's foot had been inserted into the opening. "What's the matter Chloe?"

"Good Lawd, Mis' Bella—we done been raided!" burst out the maid as the door flew wholly open.

Halsey staggered back. "A detective!" he exclaimed.

"Oh, what shall I do?" wailed Mrs. Noble. "My husband will never forgive me if this becomes known."

Bella was as calm as a good player with a royal straight flush.

"I've caught you at last," fairly hissed Drummond. "And you, too, Mrs. Dunlap. Watson, I overheard something about some stock. Let me see it. I think it will interest International Surety as well as Exporters and Manufacturers."

Through the still open door Constance had darted across the hall to her apartment.

"Not so fast," cried Drummond. "You can't escape. The front door is guarded. You can't get out."

She was gone, but a moment later emerged from the darkness of her rooms, carrying the oak box.

As she set it down on the card table, no one said a word. Deliberately she opened the box, disclosing two spools of wire inside. To the machine she attached several head pieces, such as a telephone operator wears. She turned a switch and the wire began to unroll from one spool and wind up on the other again.

Cured His RUPTURE

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 281-C, Marcellus Avenue, Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.—Adv.

20 MILLION PEOPLE USE CASCARETS--WHY?

Only True Tonic for Liver and Bowels Costs 10 Cents a Box.

Cascarets are a treat! They liven your liver, clean your thirty feet of bowels and sweeten your stomach. You eat one or two Cascarets like candy before going to bed and in the morning your head is clear, tongue is clean, stomach sweet, breath right, and cold gone and you feel grand.

Get a 10 or 25 cent box at any drug store and enjoy the most gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced. Stop sick headaches, bilious spells, indigestion, furred tongue, offensive breath and constipation. Mothers should give cross, peevish, feverish, bilious children a whole Cascaret any time.—Adv.
