BOUND TO WED GIRL ACCUSED OF THEFT

Andre Mac Dill Insists on Marriage After Lena Seabeck Is Held.

NO ONE WILL TIE KNOT.

Court and Minister Each Refuses After First Agreeing to Perform Ceremony.

Andre MacDill, a young man of No. 55 East Fourth street, Manhattan, sought strenuously in the Butler street court, Brooklyn, to-day to marry Lena Seabeck, his sweetheart, when she was held on a charge of theft by Magistrate Geismar. Twice the couple were about to be made one, but in both cases the ceremony fell through.

The girl was arrested on a charge of stealing a gold watch from the home of Mrs. I. Chandblown, of No. 12 Hamilton avenue, Brooklyn. When confronted with the charge the pretty young prisoner broke down and confessed. She had promised to marry Seabeck, and he accompanied her to court. When he learned of her predicament his loyalty was not shaken, and he asked Magistrate Geismar to marry them.

At first the Court consented and preparations were made in his chambers. At the crucial moment he backed out, excusing his refusal on the ground that the situation was too delicate. He advised the young man to wait until his sweetheart got out of prison. The boy was stubborn and sent for the Rev. Dr. A. H. C. Morse, of the Strong Place Baptist Church.

Mr. Morse went to court and said he was willing to marry the couple. When it came to tying the knot in the Magistrate's chambers he also backed out, offering the same excuse made by the Court. Then the girl went back to her cell in tears and her lover went home, declaring that he would get a parson to perform the ceremony if he had to traverse every section of the city.

WOMEN WHO BOX. Society women are learning to "put on the gloves" like professional fighters. In fact, they are being taught by real pugilists. Will every debutante soon be able to feint and strike a good blow? What is the occasion for this novelty? It is not just a fad. It is being taken up for a good reason, and you can learn all about it in NEXT SUNDAY'S WORLD.

Another Melba Night at Manhattan Opera-House

MME. MELBA IN "RIGOLETTO."

Bonci Shares Honors with the Prima Donna in "Rigoletto."

MR. HAMMERSTEIN must be assured by now that to fill the Manhattan Opera-House to overflowing he has only to announce Nellie Melba to sing. At the special performance of "Rigoletto" last night, in which she was Gilda—her fifth appearance of the season—the familiar story was repeated. Late comers could not find a vacant seat, and the limit of standing room was reached before the curtain rose. Leaders in the world of fashion were there in numbers. The carriage calls were no less than 525. It was a brilliant gathering, that showed its pleasure by applause at every opportunity.

From her first entrance, when she greeted her father, Rigoletto, upon his return home, to her disappearance in Sparafucile's inn, a willing sacrifice to the assassin's dagger to spare the life of her lover, the Duke, Melba never spared her voice. Through the impassioned love duet with the Duke, in the scene with her father after the abduction, and in the final quartet, she sang with ravishing beauty and lavish recklessness. But she showed her imperiousness by refusing to respond to the curtain calls at the end. And was she telling Ancona not to muss her hair when she talked to him as he sang?

That the prima donna was the magnet that drew the crowd there was no doubt, but there were stars of magnitude associated with her. Bonci, as the Duke, was at his very best. From the "Questa o quella" to "La donna e mobile," which he had to repeat, he sang with exquisite charm and grace. His voice blended beautifully with Melba's, and he, too, did not stint himself.

Ancona was a treat to hear in the title part, and he acted with more subtlety and assurance than at his previous appearances. Armondi's Sparafucile could scarcely have been better. Giacomini was a passable Maddalena, and all the smaller parts were well taken.

Thanks to Campanini, the orchestra and the chorus did excellent work, and there was never a moment of indifference.

There were all sorts of rumors about the house as to the presence of Calve, whom Mr. Hammerstein was said to be trying to conceal, which the impresario laughingly declined to discuss. He announced, however, the engagement of Mlle. Alice Zeppilli, a coloratura soprano from the City of Mexico, who has sung at Buenos Ayres, Bucharest and Monte Carlo.

CHARLES HENRY HAWLEY.

SOCIETY AT "RIGOLETTO."

Distinguished Audience Greets Melba at the Manhattan.

In the great audience that was present in the Manhattan Opera-House last night to greet Mme. Melba were many persons well known in society.

Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt had Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop Sands as their guests. Mrs. Vanderbilt looked very handsome in a gown of mauve satin, covered with gauze of the same shade spangled with silver. She also wore a dog collar of pearls and diamonds, with pendants, and a corsage ornament of diamonds.

Mr. and Mrs. Adrian Iselin, jr., with Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Iselin and Mrs. F. de R. Wiesmann, occupied one of the lower proscenium boxes. Mrs. Iselin, jr., was in a gown of white satin, embellished with lace and chiffon, which was worn with ornaments of diamonds, including a collar and necklace.

Mrs. Lewis Iselin wore an effective gown of pink moire combined with lace and silver spangled tulle. She also wore a tiara of silver leaves and a necklace of diamonds and pearls.

On the opposite side of the house were Mr. and Mrs. Francis Key Pendleton, Mrs. Ogden Goelet, and August Belmont, sr. Mr. and Mrs. W. Gaedley Loew, with the latter's brother, George P. Baker, jr., sat in a balcony box. Mrs. Lowe wore a gown of sulphur colored chiffon satin, trimmed with beautiful lace. Her ornaments consisted of a collar and pendants of diamonds and pearls.

Others in the audience were Mr. and Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, Miss Mary Trevor, Mr. John B. Trevor, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Childs, Miss De Forest, Mrs. Newlin Hooper, Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Clapham and Mrs. Gouverneur Kortright.
