The Democratic Convention.

Mr. Harrity's convention yesterday carried out the programme laid down for it without a hitch. Harmony was the order of the day; in fact, the convention was entirely passive in the hands of its manager, and Mr. Harrity's pretensions to be the political boss of his party in Pennsylvania were confirmed by the general acquiescence of all the clans and the complete realization of all his wishes.

The candidates nominated are of the regulation order. There is no very strong reason why every Democrat should not vote for them and no reason at all why any Republican should. It has not been customary even in Democratic conventions to nominate any man so obscure as A. L. Tilden for such a responsible office as State Treasurer. But Mr. Harrity wants to have his clerk control the Treasury, and a complaisant convention deferred to his wishes. On its personal side the ticket is weak compared with that of the Republicans. If the issue were to turn simply on the choice of men, the Democrats would go home and think no more of electing their ticket.

But Mr. Harrity, if he can help it, will not allow the mere question or the relative worth of candidates to determine this election. He thinks he has a better issue in John Bardsley. The platform is terse and non-commital on the controlling issues of the day, but is elaborate and eloquent on the subject of John Bardsley. It arraigns him almost as severely as District Attorney Graham did weeks ago It condemns him almost as strongly as did Judge Wilson. The fact that a Grand Jury had anticipated the convention in indicting John Bardsley; that a Councilmanic Committee controlled by Republicans, and with the aid of a Republican Mayor, had got together the evidence against him; that a Republican District Attorney prosecuted him and a Republican Judge sentenced him, counted for nothing with this convention. That the Republicans found a rascal among them and punished him severely is supposed, some how or other, to inure to the credit of the Democracy, and they plume themselves accordingly.

The public will not be deceived. Party connection is no test of personl honesty. The most that can be exacted of any party is that it repudiate and punish it's rascals as soon as they are detected. This the Republican party can be relied on to do, and does do it much more promptly and willingly than it's opponenthas been known to in those States where the Democratic party is the dominant power.—Philadelphia Press.

AT Rochester, N. Y. Wednesday the Republican convention nominated Collector Fassett for Governor. The platform endorses Harrison's administration and speaks for honest money.

IT is said that the success of the Chilian insurgents has encouraged the disaffected people of Mexico to plan the overthrow of President Diaz.

The charges that he had imitated Balmaceda and deserves the fate of the Chilian dictator, will hardly bear inspection. There is no comparison between the two cases. The extension of power which President Diaz now possesses has not been seized as Balmaceda's was, in apposition to Congress, but was brought about in orderly and constitutional ways.

The governments of Latin America must not be judged by the standard established by this great English-speaking country. Their people try to imitate the United States as nearly as they can, but it is not in them to make a perfect copy. Mexico has done better than an any other republic and it is to be hoped that she will be permitted to proceed unhindered by revolutionary plotters.

The Mexican people have comparatively little to complain of in the matter of misgovernment, and under Diaz the country has made made great strides forward.—Ex.

AT Harrisburg, last Thursday, the Democratic State-convention, nominated R. E. Wright, an attorney of Lehigh Co., for Auditor-General; and A. L. Tilden, a lumber dealer of Erie Co. for State Treasurer.

The platform ignores National issues altogether, excepting to favor "a sound and stable currency based in gold and silver, coined and circulated in proportions as will keep them in a parity," in which it is at variance with the Democratic platforms of all the Southern and Western states, and confines itself to arraigning and condemning the Republican party of the state for its management of the state finances of the state, the late alleged Republican legislature for various misdoings; and favors a constitutional convention in the interest of ballot reform "only."

AN Iowa Democrat, who has been stopping at this place for a few days, visited Apollo on Monday and had the scales knocked off his eyes by a visit to the tin plate mill of Lauffman Co. He had the prevalent Democratic idea that tin plate could not be made in this country, but being a man of good sense, when he witnessed the manufacture of tin plate and was told of the large output of the mill, he acknowledged the corn; and while he is not yet prepared to espouse the Republican cause, he is willing to admit that tin plate of good quality is now really being made in this country.—Indiana Messenger.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

A funny state of affairs was developed by the arrest of a newly-wedded couple at Scranton, a day or two ago. They were stopped while on their wedding tour by a elegram from the proverbially irate father. The bride explained that her papa opposed the marriage while her mama favored it. The former's objection war principally on the ground of the daughter's age, she being 19. She retaliated by saying her mother was only 15 when her father married her. That's all very pretty and smart, but the warrant or which she is arrested charged her with stealing $1,000 from her father's cash box.

A green fly, which works on the horns of cattle, has made its appearance in the vicinity of Rural Valley, Elderton, in Armstrong county. A farmer whose cattle has suffered from the pest says the flies appear in numbers at the base of the horn, eat into the center of it and from there penetrate into the brain, killing the animal. Several head of cattle have died in that neighborhood from this cause. Fine tar plentifully supplied at the base of the horn will kill the fly and prevent others working. It is no means certain that the pest is confined to the neighborhood mentioned, and we advise farmers everywhere to examine the horns of their cattle and apply the remedy if necessary before it is too late.

A specimen of that rare reptile, a white blacksnake, was on exhibition at Clarion last week, together with a photograph of the snake's eye, in which can be seen distinctly the portrait of the man—Farmer Dulaney—Who narrowly escaped death from the reptile.

A Swede, Alfred Barkhard, near Reno, Venango county, was bitten on the forefinger by a copperhead snake, Monday afternoon, while turning over a large stone. With a dull knife the young man sawed the finger off at the first joint, sucked the wound and removed the poison, after which he captured the snake which was over two feet long.

A Percheron stallion at the New Castle fair grounds, attacked Miss Mamaie Riley, throwing her to the ground. Miss Riley's escort, James Young, grasped a fork and threw the animal off, just as the vicious brute was in the act of stamping on the young woman.

A monster locomotive is being built by the Pennsylvania railroad company at the Altoona shops. It will be about three times as long as the average engine, with two sets of driving wheels. It will be used for the Limited when completed.

A man was lately caught in the act of taking a 25 pound bag of poison to the barn, evidently with the intent af poisoning horses. Several days ago five head of valuable cattle were poisoned for the Economities. The case was put in Officer Lazarus hands. For several nights he secreted himself in a cornfield on the farm and seeing two men enter the barn, followed them. After a sharp fight he arrested one the other running away. He was for several years in the employ of the Economites; but was discharged. It is held by some that he was hired to do the poisoning. Other developments will likely follow

While Nrs. David Foster of Wayne twp., Armstrong county, was out picking berries Saturday, her little two-year-old child was drowned. Before going out Mrs Foster poured some water into a tub, and while she was away the little one tried to dip a tinful out. Becoming overbalanced, the child fell into the water, and no one being near to pull it out, was drowned. It was indeed, a very sad affair.

Farmers should not forget that under the law they are subject to a fine of $50 if prosecuted and convicted for permitting Canada thistles to grow on their premises. The industrious farmers of various sections of the county are complaining bitterly of the negligence of their neighbors in this respect, and threaten prosecution unless the thistles are destroyed.

Be on guard against the Canada thistle exterminator when he offers to sell you a bushel of "exterminator" for $3.50. He's a fraud of first water.

AT Prohibition Park, near New York, last Sunday Rev. Sam Jones reached the climax of sarcasm on the subject of languid, perfunctory sermonizing by saying: —"You all know that certain type of preacher who proceeds something in this way: "Here am I, Jeremiah Jones, D. D., saved by the grace of God, with a message to deliver. Believe and be saved, or do the other thing and be damned—and I don't care much which."

The Hunt Family Reunion.

The eleventh annual reunion of the Hunt connection to the number of one hundred or more met in Elliott's Grove near the residence of Mrs. E. E. McFarland, a few days ago. The order of the forenoon was shaking hands and renewing old acquaintances, till the hour of noon arrived when the table cloths were spread and all enjoyed a good dinner, and amid much laughing and a general good time (the only scarcity seemed to be gizzard) and after dinner the men enjoyed a game of ball We then assembled again, being called to order by the President J. A. Hindman, of Grove City. The secretary being absent Mrs. Jno. Hunt was called upon to officiate. Next in order was electing officers for the next year, which resulted in Dr. Chas. Hunt, of Princeton, being elected President, Mr. Geo. Dean, of Harlansburg, Lawrence Co., Vice Pres. and Mrs. Lizzie Black, of Loudon, Mercer Co., as secretary.

It was unanimously decided to meet in the same place the first Wednesday of September, 1892. Among those present we noticed Jas. Hunt and wife, of Harlansburg, Mrs. Patton, of New Castle, Wm. Black, of London, Mr. Geo. Patterson and wife, of East Brook, Lawrence Co., the Misses Stanley, of Venango Co., Joseph McFarland, of Sharon, Jos. Hindman of Pittsburg, Mrs. J. C. Twenty-seventh Annual Convention of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association.

This convention will be held in Bethlehem, Northampton county, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, September 29 and 30, and October 1, 1891, having been postponed one week at the urgent request of the local committee of arrangements.

The first session will be held Tuesday evening at 7:30, in the Moravian church, where delegates should report immediately upon their arrival. Each county is entitled to ten delegates, and each city of 10,000 or more inhabitants, to ten additional. By action of the convention at New Castle, 1890, associations not auxiliary to the inter-denominational work, in counties not containing such auxiliary association are also invited to send ten delegates each.

All delegates will be entertained by the Christain people of Bethlehem, and should promptly advise Rev. G. A. Schwekes of their purpose to attend.

The Central railroad of New Jersey, the Lehigh Valley, Pennsylvania, Philadelphia & Reading and Baltimore & Ohio railroads have granted excursion rates to Delegates and others attending, who will receive orders for tickets by applying to Rev. G. F. Scott, No. 442 Powell streets, South Bethlehem, naming the roads over which they will travel.

The programme as arranged is an excellent one, and will well repay attendance from all parts of the State.

It is hoped that the unavoidable change of date will not prevent any from attending who had arranged for the original date, and that many others may also be enabled to be present.

By order of the Executive Committee.

AT the Free Methodist Camp meeting at Sydenham, Canada, last week, the preacher denounced the wearing of corsets so vigorously that the women present became excited, a fire was hastily built and amid singing and praying the excited sisters openly removed the condemned articles and threw them into the fire. Many forgot their exposed condition and had to be forcibly removed to a neighboring hotel to recover their senses.

(Special Correspondence.)

PITTSBURG, Sep. 3, 1891.

All day long hammers rang and saws coarsely growled preparing for the opening of the third season of the great Pittsburg Exposition. Twenty thousand visitors attested their interest in the popular institution, and expressed their admiration in words of commendation and praise at the brilliant success which attended the opening of the third and finest Exposition of the series. The Exposition is a great place to study human nature, and it is not to be wondered at that exhibitors and managers alike, were gratified that their efforts to please were heartily appreciated by the throngs of people who completely filled the massive buildings.

It requires half a dozen visits and much genuine work to get out of the Exposition the value there is in it for every visitor. The displays should be visited seriatum and in a methodical way. As an enthusiastic individual said last evening: "If it should happen to-night that the whole civilized world, with all its exhibits and achievements should perish by some cosmic catastrophe, like that which engulfed Atlantis, and out of all the work done in the world nothing should remain but the Exposition buildings and their contents, it would be possible for future science to reconstruct the whole of our civilization Out of that collection the antiquarian of the fifthieth century could reconstruct the citizen of the nineteenth, as though he had lived among us. He could describe the shoes we wore and the hats wherewith we were covered; the food we ate and the couches we slept in; the carpets upon which we trod and the kind of houses we built; the pictures we looked at and the books we read. He could rebuild the writing machine and the steam pump; the telephone and the cash register. These mammoth structures contain the best expression of what the American people are and what they can do. It is an open book and every visitor should read it from cover to cover." The gentleman stated the facts correctly and we cordially agree with him.

Every department of the Exposition is full to overflowing with costly and attractive displays. It is difficult to suggest how the exhibits could be improved, either as to their character or arrangement, and we do not wonder that the public was more than satisfied and delighted at what it saw and heard last night.

The magnificent band of the famous New York Seventh Regiment seemed to play as players never played before, and the musicians and their accomplished leader quickly ingratiated themselves into public favor. They could not help but do so, for certainly the music was enchanting, and encore after encore showed how highly it was appreciated by the vast concourse of people. Col. Cappa and his band have evidently laid themselves out to please, and his immense repertoire of music enables him to meet the wishes of all.

Then the fine Art Department loan collection. Words are powerless to describe its wondrous beauty. Nothing like it has ever been seen in Western Pennsylvania; it is indeed a rare collection of gems, carefully selected by men of taste and culture for the embelishment of their homes. Its value is represented by hundreds of thousands of dollars; the rooms are handsomely draped and every thing which good taste could suggest has been done to properly display the magnificent canvases. We have not space nor time in this letter to go into details, but will reserve that for a future time. We urge our readers to personally visit the supurb galleries and see for themselves what has been prepared for them. We are informed that the railroads centering in Pittsburg have made liberal concessions so as to enable our readers to take in the Exposition, and we feel sure that they will improve the opportunity to do so.

Wedding Anniversary.

SLIPPERYROCK TP., Sept. 5th, 1891.

This being the 41st wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Keister, their relatives and neighbors assembled to pay their respects to the aged couple, and to celebrate the day in a social and complimentary manner. At 12 o'clock dinner was announced and oh, what a dinner, no common layout, but everything to satisfy the inner man. After 230 had feasted the assembly was called to order by electing Z. B. Shepard, President, and T. S. Beatty, Secretary. The meeting was addressed by Mr. A. G. Black, who extolled Mr. and Mrs. Keister highly as citizens and neighbors; he was followed by a speech by Mrs. Dawson Wadsworth, then a song in German by Mrs. Hemphill, followed by songs entitled "Down on the Farm," and "The Merriest Girl that's out," by Miss McCament and her sister Mrs. Fox.

The exercises over we repaired to our homes feeling that we had a very social and pleasant time. SEC.

THE EXAMPLE OF KINGS.

How the Gender of a Noun Came to Be Changed.

The French court, ever fond of novelty, once carried its innovations in language so far as to alter the gender of a substantive in compliment to an infant mistake of their grand monarch. The word "carrosse," a coach, was originally feminine, as its termination implies, says Youth's Companion.

But when M. Menage published a dictionary he gave it as avowedly masculine. The revolution as to the gender of this word arose from a trivial grammatical error.

Louis XIV. succeeded to the crown at the age of five years. Not long afterward, on inquiring for his coach one day, he happened to mistake the gender of the noun, and said: "On est mon carrosse?" using the masculine pronoun instead of the feminine. The courtiers, on the principle that the king can do no wrong, even in grammar, at once treated the word "carrosse" as masculine, and so it has continued ever since.

"Everyone imitates the example of the king," used to be a courtly maxim, and it is even now acted upon more generally than those who imitate it would acknowledge. Yet even the most slavish imitators of royalty would hardly go so far as did the French courtiers during the preceding reign, that of Louis XIII.

This monarch also was a boy when he succeeded Henry IV. And being a boy he had no beard. Therefore the courtiers would wear no beard themselves. Not a man of them ventured to appear in the king's presence unless smoothly shaven.

CURIOUS ENGLISH.

Specimens of Queer Expressions Used by Foreigners.

A notice displayed in a Norway hotel is a curious specimen of "English as she is spoke." It reads as follows: "Bath! first-class bath. Can anybody get. Tushbath. Warm and Cold. Tubbath and Shower-bath. At any time. Except Saturday. By two hours forbore." This brings to mind, says Chambers' Journal, another specimen of foreigners' English, displayed on a notice posted up in an art exhibition in Japan to which foreigners were welcomed. Here are a few examples of the rules: "Visitors is requested at the entrance to show tickets for inspection. Tickets are charged 10 sens an 2 sens, for the special and common respectively. No visitor who is mad or intoxicated is allowed to enter in, if any person found in shall be claimed to retire. No visitor is allowed to carry in with himself any parcel, umbrella, stick, and the like kind, except his purse, and is strictly forbidden to take in with himself dog, or the same kind of beasts. Visitor is requested to take good care of himself from thievely."

An Englishman in Boulogne saw displayed in a shop window this notice: "Eating and Drinking Sold Here."

A LECTURE TO LOVERS.

Good Advice to Boys and Girls Who Are in Love or Expect to Be.

Jerome K. Jerome, the English essayist and humorist, delivers this interesting lecture to lovers and those contemplating love:

"Oh, you foolish, foolish little maidens, with your dainty heads so full of unwisdom, how often, oh, how often are you to be warned that it is not always the sweetest thing in lovers that is the best material to make a good-wearing husband out of? 'The lover sighing like a furnace' will not go on sighing like a furnace forever. That furnace will go out. He will become the husband 'full of strange oaths, jealous in honor, sudden and quick in quarrel,' and grow 'into the lean and slippered pantaloon.' How will he wear? There will be no changing if he does not suit, no sending him back to be altered, no having him let out a bit where he is too tight and hurts you, no having him taken in where he is too loose, no laying him by when the cold comes to wrap yourself up in something warmer. As he is when you select him, so he will have to last you all your life, through all changes, through all seasons."

THE HAWAIIAN'S "POI."

They Eat It with Their Fingers and Catch It on the Fly.

In an article on the Sandwich islands a writer in Frank Leslie's Monthly says:

We saw the natives eating "poi." Poi is something like cornstarch and is made from the "taro," the Hawaiian potato, which is first mashed into a kind of flour and then cooked until it is a thick paste. Their manner of eating it is peculiar, and I will describe it as I saw it.

Four or five persons (natives) were seated on the forward deck around an open earthen jar containing this poi. Putting their two forefingers together they would dip them into this jar; a little twist of the wrist would collect a fair mouthful, which was lifted rapidly to the mouth (no dripping allowed); the fingers were licked clean, and then they were ready for another "go."

It doesn't look pretty, and as it is customary for several to eat from the same dish it rather went against my American prejudice. If I was very much in love, and "she" had very pretty fingers and was very particular about her hands, I might be wilfing to eat poi with her.

Three Lotos Plants.

Three lotos plants, set out three years ago in the small lake near the northwestern corner of Central park, New York, have increased hundreds and spread over an area of many square yards. Scores of great pink blossoms are now tossing their heads in air and thousands of large cup-like leaves rise above the surface of the water. Within a year or two the lake itself is likely to be invisible beneath its mass of think green leaves. The sight now, says the Sun, is one of the finest in the park. "Curiously enough the attempt to domesticate the lotos in the lower lake has been almost a failure. The American lotos flourishes finely in the lily pond, just east of the so-called conservatory lake."
