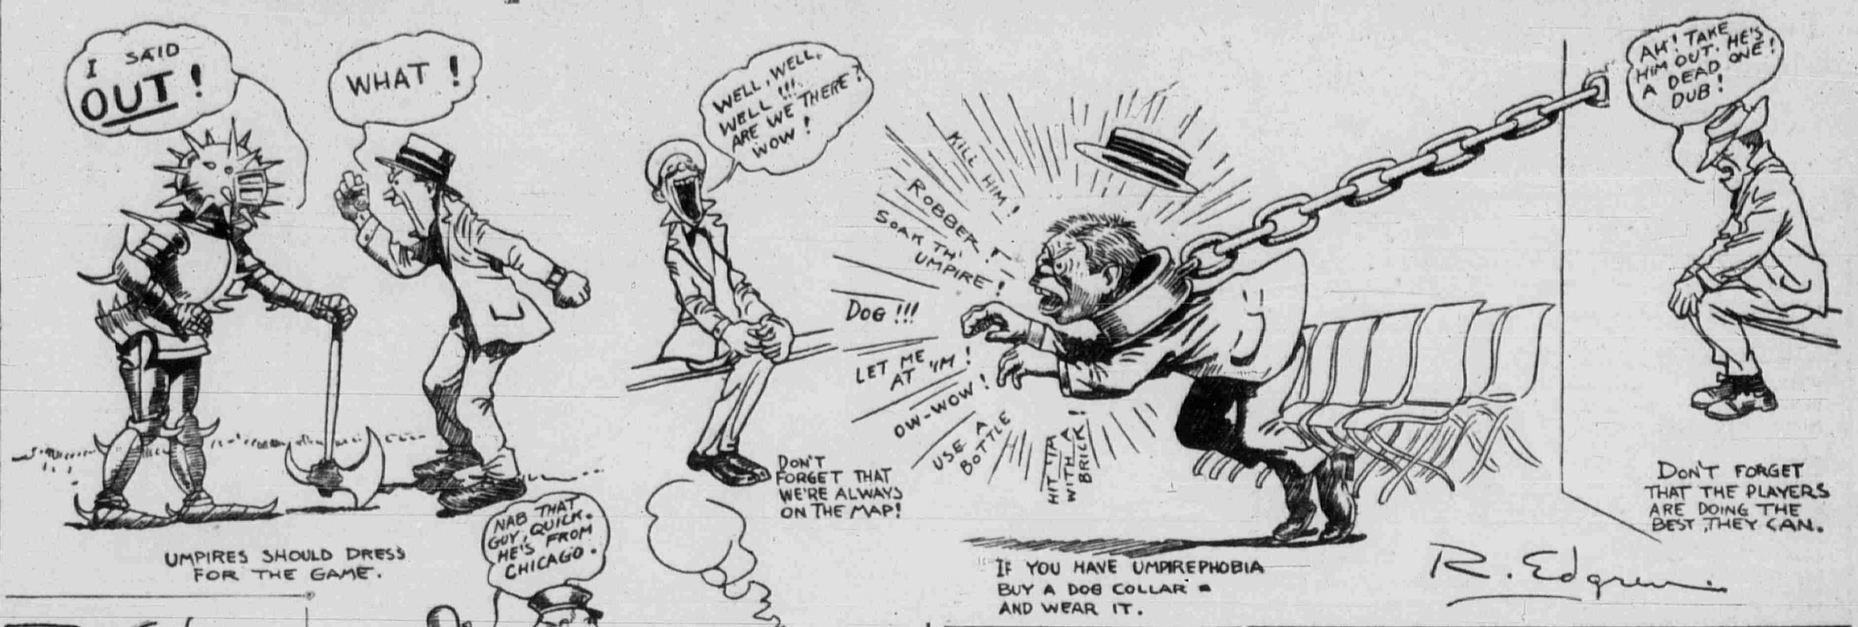
"UMPIREPHOBIA"—NAME OF NEW AILMENT WHICH THREATENS FANS.



DON'T THINK ANOTHER FAN IS A CROOK JUST BECAUSE HE DOESN'T LIVE IN YOUR VILLAGE.

EVEN a ballplayer is human. Even an umpire is human. Fans forget these things sometimes. When you see a pitcher go to pieces and let in a brace of runs, losing the game, don't hoot. He's doing the best he can, and when he goes back to the dressing-rooms he'll be the sorest man on the whole grounds. When an old-time favorite comes to bat and strikes out, don't ask if he's afflicted with strabismus. He feels worse about it than you possibly can, no matter how hot a fan you may be.

I think the most solemn sight I ever saw was the mournful march of our great Matty back to the clubhouse a year ago, when he fell down in the opening game. For pathos that had a flock of funerals shaded. Matty felt worse than all the fans put together. And it wasn't his fault. He was "there with the goods" later on. He made good in many a hard-fought game afterward. Even the best have their off days.

AND as for the umpire—you may not always see things in the same way he does. But he is giving decisions on his honest opinions, and nine times out of ten, even when they are closest, he is right. An umpire can't afford to give a wrong decision. His reputation is what he lives upon. And the game is a greater strain upon his nerve than on that of any player in it. He must be on the watch during every second of the time. The players have rests. The umpire can never rest until the last inning is over.

"CHARLEY MITCHELL and I have been pretty good friends," said John L. Sullivan a few days ago. "Ever since we occupied cells in the same jail in France. After our hard and bloody fight at Chantilly the cops arrested us. It was a long way from Boston Common. I was still chilled from the rain and the cold wind, and little Mitchell was sore inside and out from the clouting he had taken. In the jail I felt very lonesome, and when I tried to talk to the Frenchies they handed me a lot of parley-vous that had me up in the air. There wasn't a man in the frog-eating bunch with sense enough to talk English.

"MITCHELL could talk a sort of hamstrung French that the keepers could puzzle out. I tried to be friendly with Charlie, but for a while he only made remarks that wouldn't look good in print. I was sick as a dog, and after a while I had a bad chill. Then Mitchell loosened up and pow-wowed with the keepers until they brought me a drink of brandy.

"When we got out I asked Charlie to take dinner with me. He accepted.

"There'll be no sparring over this table," was all he had to say. I won't even throw a plate at you, I replied.

"That eating contest was to a finish. It ended in another draw. And when it was all over we shook hands and called off any old feud we might have had. We have had a tiff or two now and then since, but, on the level, I have a great admiration for the game little fellow who gave me the hardest fight of my life."

JOHN L. SULLIVAN is still a big man. He has a big way about him. The old champion of all champions still counts thousands of friends. And the reason—at least a great part of the reason—is the spirit shown in the story above. He never maligned a man he had beaten, or belittled a man who beat him or gave him a hard fight.

BOB FITZSIMMONS struggled over from Jersey to-day with a chip on his shoulder and grief in his heart. There was fire, too, in the eye of the grand old man of the ring, for he had read the statement made by "Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien, in San Francisco, in which it was set forth that all the fights in which he had engaged had been fakes, in particular mentioning that with Bob in Philadelphia.

Shifting his chip from one shoulder to the other, Bob thus unburdened his mind: "So O'Brien says that the fight in Philadelphia was 'fixed,' does he? Well, it was, so far as his having arranged with the police to stop it, provided I didn't knock him cold with a single punch. That's all the fixing there was to that fight. But you just put it into cold type that if O'Brien does not make a retraction of his statement that I was a party to any fake I will make him eat his words the first time he meets me.

"You can also say that I will meet O'Brien at any time and before any club, and if I don't stop him inside of ten rounds he can have the entire gate receipts. If I knock him out I will give the entire receipts—minus training expenses—to charity.

"You can say I am open to fight any man in the world—middle, light heavy or heavy weight. I don't bar Johnson, either."

Fitzsimmons also said he wished to correct a recent statement to the effect that he had outpointed Dempsey at New Orleans. Bob says he weighed 150 1-2 pounds with his coat and fighting togs on, and that Dempsey, who was to come in at 151, toned up the beam and did not weigh less than 157.

Having unburdened his mind on fighting topics, Bob settled his chip to the other shoulder and said he guessed he would be getting back to the farm, as 'twas near milking time.
