NO LABOR SHORTAGE KNOWN IN THE EAST

(By Associated Press.)

CHICAGO, May 13.—The nation's industrial manpower has not suffered serious depletion as a result of the United State's first year in the world war, so far as indicated in recent surveys of the general labor situation conducted by the United States employment service and the Illinois free employment bureau. Except in certain skilled trades these bureaus find there is no marked shortage of labor, the chief problem at present being distribution.

On an average of 100,000 persons are obtaining employment through the Chicago district office of the federal bureau as compared with a total of 495,000 during the last fiscal year. This huge increase is accounted for by the recent reorganization of the bureau for service as the national machinery for the mobilization and distribution of the country's labor. As such it has handled the applications of hundreds of thousands of workers registering with the public service reserve, including more than 260,000 mechanics for shipbuilding.

A system of daily surveys shows the bureaus where the greatest shortages or surpluses exist and with this information it is able to make economic distribution. Manufacturers are being urged to use the government agency as far as possible in order to reduce the labor turned over and uneconomic competition between industries essential to the war.

The demand for women workers is said to be about normal. Only in a few isolated cases have they replaced men called to the colors. A few plants engaged on war contracts have employed large numbers of women without difficulty.

Many women teachers are said to be leaving the school rooms for more remunerative employment and the draft has drawn so heavily upon the already scant supply of men teachers that several states report the situation alarming for next year. A survey of thirty-seven states just completed by the professional service division of the federal bureau shows that during the present school year West Virginia was forced to close between 150 and 200 schools because of the scarcity of teachers. In Montana and Wyoming about two dozen schools were closed for the same reason, while New Hampshire, North Carolina, Delaware, Mississippi, Alabama, New Mexico, South Dakota, Wisconsin and Indiana report a marked shortage. The bureau has 700 teachers' applications and 600 vacancies listed, but a large percentage of those seeking positions, it is pointed out, are not qualified for work in the departments where the greatest deficiency exists.

To cope with what is expected to be an unprecedented railroad labor shortage later in the year, a new department of the United States employment service has been organized to handle railroad labor for the western regional district. By order of Director-General McAdoo the railroads have abolished their labor bureaus and the government agency will recruit their men as well as direct the distribution. In event of an acute shortage of workers in maintenance of way departments, it is planned to suspend work not absolutely necessary and send men from these locations to points where they are more urgently needed. A great number of laborers are said to have left the roads because of the higher wages they can obtain in mines or factories.

So far the farmers of the central west and northwest have had little difficulty in finding enough help. Most of them demand experienced hands but are being urged by employment officials to accept more men from the public service reserve, which consists for the most part of students.

ULSTER MAY BE GIVEN VETO POWER IN THE PROPOSED IRISH PARLIAMENT

(By Associated Press.)

LONDON, May 13.—A plan to safeguard the interests of Ulster by giving its representatives a veto power in the proposed new Irish parliament, over measures which conflict with Ulster interests, has been characterized by Premier Lloyd George as a "workable expedient." This fact has just been disclosed by making public a letter which the premier wrote to Sir Horace Plunkett, chairman of the Irish convention, some time ago when the convention became deadlocked over the Ulster question and sent delegates to confer with the premier in London.

"The government understands," wrote Mr. Lloyd George, "that it has been suggested that a safeguard of Ulster interests might be secured by provision of an Ulster committee within the Irish parliament with power to modify and, if necessary, to exclude the application to Ulster of certain measures either of legislation or administration which are not consonant with the interests of Ulster. This appears to be a workable expedient, whereby special consideration of Ulster conditions can be secured and the objections to the single legislature for Ireland overcome."

Despite the premier's approval of this plan the Ulster unionists delegates to the Irish convention declined to participate in any scheme of self-government for Ireland.

Outlining broadly the views of the British government on the Irish home rule question, Premier Lloyd George wrote to Sir Horace Plunkett as follows:

"Questions of which there is an acute difference of opinion in Ireland and Great Britain must be held over for determination until after the war." The premier considered the control of the Irish customs and excise one of the problems which must await the conclusion of peace, for he added:

"The government suggests that, during the period of the war and for the period of two years thereafter the control of customs and excise should be reserved to the United Kingdom parliament; that as soon as possible after the Irish parliament has been established a joint exchequer board should be set up to secure the determination of the true revenues of Ireland."

He explained to Sir Horace in the letter, "that it would be practically impossible to make such a disturbance of the fiscal and financial relations of Great Britain and Ireland in the midst of the great war," as would result in an attempt to transfer of the Irish parliament control to the Irish customs.

"The government considers," wrote the premier, "that during the period of the war the control of all taxation other than customs and excise should be handed over to the Irish parliament," but he stipulated that Ireland should contribute as agreed proportion of the annual expenditure of the United Kingdom.

Main features of the customs plan approved by Lloyd George, were adopted in a majority report of the Irish convention. Whether they will be put into effect depends upon the action taken by the imperial parliament on the Irish home rule bill.
