AMERICAN TROOPS TELL OF FIGHT AGAINST PICKED BAVARIAN SQUAD

(Correspondence Associated Press)

WITH THE AMERICAN TROOPS IN FRANCE, July 15.—Though the American troops have had three engagements in the Toul sector during the past three months men in the division say "there has been just one fight."

The big raid on Apremont in April they call "the Apremont affair;" they refer to the attack on Seicheprey, ten days later as "the Seicheprey thing;" but, the morning of June 16 at Xivray, they say, "there was a fight."

This distinction does no wrong to the defenders of Apremont and Seicheprey. The men did their best there, and that best was as good as could be expected under the circumstances, but there best then was not so good as their best at Xivray. That is the significance given to the distinction by French officers. They say that it was at Xivray the men holding the sector showed they had learned how to do what must be done in the front line.

Xivray has a similar meaning to the Germans in that sector if the evidence of prison ers may be trusted. The men captured there show increased respect for the fighting qualities of the Americans and betray a deeper awe of the American machine gun.

It is now disparagement of the work the ordinary rifle did there to say that the quick-firers decided the issue. Two companies of infantry, without dugouts to shelter them held their grounds on the right of the position through a heavy artillery preparation and kept the enemy from bringing up reinforcements throughout the fight. Meanwhile, in the center of Xivray, and on the left, the machine gunners did the rest.

The enemy's plan, according to prisoners, was to force the village, destroy the defense works, make the place untenable and take prisoners. The effort was well organized and might have succeeded but for the work of the quick-firers.

Six hundred men advanced to the attack in no less than a dozen different columns, led by 200 picked Bavarian storming troops. They came up on the right flank, on the left and on the center under cover of smoke, making a dark night still darker. They crept up the ravines and slipped through the hollows. The sharp ears of sentries alone prevented a total surprise.

Their guns laid down a heavy box barrage that prevented the reinforcing of the front line. One platoon, led by Lieutenant Doan, from Maine, got through the first curtain of fire. Doan even went through the second with some volunteers, but that was all the help that could be sent to the 225 men that were holding the line attacked. They were only one to three, but they fought in a way to surprise and dismay the 600 Germans.

One machine gun section in the village was reduced to two men, Monfort Wyckoff and John Flynn. Their gun jammed and Flynn kept the Germans off with his revolver while Wyckoff got the quick-firer going again. They held their ground to the end. The other men, unable to get a sight of the Germans from their trench climbed the parapet and stood there erect firing their automatics from the shoulder. Two infantrymen crawled out of a shell to get a better aim.

The Germans had lost a third of their 600 men when growing daylight impaired the effectiveness of their screen and they began to retire. The fifty odd unwounded Americans left out of 225 went over the top after them.

Two hundred is a conservative estimate of the German losses for our men buried forty-seven of them on the field and there were more corpses in the tall grass facing the position, out of reach. Thus the Germans lost nearly as many men as they had facing them during the fight.

One of the heroes of the day was a cook who had been dismissed from the service on account of loose habits with respect to drink. When sober he was possessed of an astonishing amount of perseverance. He had foiled all efforts of the officers to put him out of the division. He left one regiment to appear in another. He passed from one company to another until he had reached the last one. If he was thrown out of that it was all over with his soldiering. He was one of the volunteers that went through both barrages and he stayed through the fight giving first aid to the wounded under the sharpest fire from the assailants.
