JUST GO AHEAD AND SUE, HE TOLD WIFE'S LAWYER

Jacob Rubinson Also Quoted as Saying He Would Like the Notoriety.

EACH BLAMES OTHER.

Real Estate Operator Ordered to Pay Temporary Alimony and Lawyer's Fee.

"Let her go ahead and sue. I want all the notoriety I can get. Put it all in the papers. For rendering such services I shall give you a champagne supper. I'd rather spend $15,000 for lawyers' fees than give my wife a cent."

This is what Jacob Rubinson, of Rubinson Brothers, real estate operators of Broadway and Myrtle avenue, Brooklyn, said when his wife's nephew, Samuel Feldman, a lawyer, beseeched him to send more than $15 a week to Mrs. Rubinson, according to Mr. Feldman's sworn statement.

So Anna Rubinson, after eighteen years of married life, has brought an action for a separation.

She tells a story of her early struggles with Jacob and how they worked night and day until they had saved up enough in the trade she knew—that of making wire frames for women's hats—to open a factory for the manufacture of caps. The business so prospered that Jacob sold the cap factory for $20,000 and joined his brother, Max Rubinson, already a figure in the Brooklyn field, in the real estate business. Mrs. Robinson says they lived in the house owned by the brothers at No. 140 Stockton street, Brooklyn, and later at Clermont Court and the Carnegie Hotel, in upper Madison avenue, and their living expenses were from $3,000 to $4,000 a year. Her brother, Wulf Feldman, declares that as an agent of the Rubinson Brothers he had access to the books for years, and that their balance to the good averaged $8,000 a year or more.

Her Health Failed.

But the wife's health broke down; she became an invalid. She says there were many disagreements, and on June 19, 1904, he abandoned her at the Carnegie Hotel, sailing for Europe, and sent word that it were better that they live apart. He sent her $30 a week for a long time, but finally cut it down to $15, and she says she was forced to go to live with her brother, Wulf Feldman, and her brother-in-law, Julius Hochman, at No. 9 East Ninety-seventh street.

It was in this situation that her brother and his lawyer called on her husband to plead for a more liberal allowance for her. She had been to Mount Sinai and to the Philanthropin Hospital for treatment for a hemorrhage of the brain, and there was a big doctor's bill to pay.

All this came out when Charles E. Le Barbier asked Justice O'Gorman in the Supreme Court for $30 weekly allmony and a counsel fee for Mrs. Rubinson.

Opposing any allowance of allmony, Jacob Rubinson admitted much of his wife's story, but offset it with his own tale of woe. He said that his wife became so ill that it worked on her temper and that she was at times almost unmanageable.

"She was cranky toward myself, my brother, with whom we lived, and our servants," he said, "and we could not keep a servant any length of time.

"My brother Max paid half the expenses of the family. She finally turned my brother Max out of the house. At times she acted as though wholly irrational, and I called Dr. Fraenkel.

"He suggested the psycopathic ward at Bellevue for her. At last I had to rent a furnished room with my brother for sleeping purposes and eat my meals at restaurants."

Why He Went to Europe.

Rubinson says that by reason of incessant worry and mental strain his own health broke down, and his trip to Europe was by the order of his physician.

"On my return," he said, "I found my wife living with her folks and I could afford but $15 a week for her. I was so ill I had given up, and Max carried on the real estate business alone. I am indebted to him. The property is all his. Yet, as a matter of brotherly affection, he has retained me as an apparent member of the firm."

Robinson says Hochman and Wulf Feldman took turns calling on him for more money in the name of his wife, each telling him the other didn't count. When suit was threatened he told them to go ahead and sue.

Justice O'Gorman ordered Jacob to send $30 a week alimony to his wife, pending the trial of her suit, and to pay $150 to her lawyer.

TAFT SUGGESTS $5,000,000 CHANGE

Secretary, Looking to Bigger Warships, Wants Panama Canal Locks Wider.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Secretary Taft has written to the President recommending an increase of the width of the Panama Canal locks from 100 feet, as at present planned, to 110 feet. The change will cost about $5,000,000 additional, but meets the naval view as to the likelihood of larger battleships in the future.

COSTS HIM $10 TO HUG WOMAN ON THE STREET

Cyrus Burby, Clerk in the Register's Office, Fined In Yorkville Court.

Cyrus Burby, a clerk in the Register's office, to-day pleaded mistaken identity when arraigned in the Yorkville Court, charged with hugging and insulting Mrs. Sarah Hatow, of No. 101 West One Hundred and Fifteenth street, as she left Proctor's Theatre, at Third avenue and Fifty-eighth street, last night.

"He is the same man," declared Mrs. Hatow, "and I guess he well remembers the drubbing I gave him with my umbrella."

Mrs. Hatow is a comely young woman, and appeared in court with three women friends who were with her when the incident occurred, and who not only corroborated her story, but identified Burby.

"After the play was over we left the theatre and started down Third avenue," said Mrs. Hatow. "We had gone a block when this man came up behind us and put an arm around me and another around Miss Lillian Butterman, who was walking beside me. His conduct was offensive and he made an insulting remark.

"I pushed him away and demanded to know what he meant, and when he attempted to repeat his action I struck him over the head with my umbrella. I knocked his hat off, and he then slapped me in the face, knocking off my glasses and breaking them.

"My friends joined me in an attack on him, and he was finally routed. We looked around for a policeman, but could not find one, and again started on our way. At Fifty-fifth street we met Policeman Gerwig and told him of our experience. He came back with us, and we found this man standing on the corner talking to two other men. I never saw this man before in my life, and I think he deserves to be severely punished."

Burby swore that Mrs. Hatow and her friends were badly mistaken. He produced half a dozen witnesses, all of whom said Burby had not annoyed the women. His brother, Alonzo G. Burby, a lawyer, appeared to defend him. Magistrate Wahle was forced to decide which side was telling the truth, and he chose to believe the women.

"I would advise you to leave women alone hereafter," the Magistrate said to Burby. He fined him $10.

COTTON BUYING MET BY PROFIT TAKING.

Cotton started firm in the market today, reflecting higher cables. There was active buying credited to a leading operator, but a number of houses with private wires took profits, supplying the demand. The opening prices were: January, 10.80 to 10.82; March, 10.97 to 10.98; April, 11.00 bid; May, 11.04 to 11.06; July, 10.94 to 10.95; August, 10.75 offered; October, 10.26 to 10.30.

STOCKS ACTIVE AT GOOD PRICES

Louisville & Nashville, Northern Pacific and Sugar Among Leaders.

Stock quotations in the early market to-day showed moderate advances for the active issues, a hesitating tone in London acting as a restraining influence. Louisville & Nashville rose 3 points, American Locomotive 1 1-2, Norfolk & Western 1 3-8, Northern Pacific and Southern Railway preferred 1 1-4, Baltimore & Ohio, Cleveland, Chicago, Cincinnati & St. Louis and American Smelting 1 and New York Central, American Sugar and Virginia-Carolina Chemical large fractions.

There was a reaction later, but the prices held above Saturday's closing. Trading was brisk.

Free offering of stocks at noon affected prices and wiped out gains. A brisk rise in Canadian Pacific in the afternoon, however, started a rally, which, after some see-sawing, brought the list to a good, profitable basis, the market closing active and at the best of the day. Reading was a trading factor.

The total sales of stock were 981,200 shares and of bonds $4,400,200.

WANTS SUBWAYS LARGE ENOUGH FOR STEAM CARS

Public Service Corporation Suggests Radical Changes in Present Plans.

In the opinion of the Public Service Commission it would be a serious mistake to build another subway of such dimensions that an existing railroad might be debarred from being a competitive bidder, or through which it would be impossible to run railroad cars.

The Commission thus expresses itself in a communication sent by Chairman Willcox to-day to the Board of Estimate, which is to consider contracts for the building of the Fourth avenue subway in Brooklyn.

Should Be Enlarged.

"The trains through the Fourth avenue subway," the Commission says, "will continue over the Manhattan Bridge and be run through the subway loop now under construction in Canal and Centre streets. If the Fourth avenue subway is enlarged it would be advisable to enlarge the subway loop, otherwise the larger cars used by steam roads could only run as far as the Manhattan terminal of the Manhattan Bridge, the subway loop only allowing for a headroom of 13 feet 6 inches above top of rail, whereas 14 feet 8 inches are necessary for the cars used in suburban traffic.

"The subway loop, connecting as it does the Williamsburg Bridge with the other two bridges, is so planned that the cars from any future subway extending into Brooklyn or Queens from the Brooklyn terminus of the Williamsburg Bridge can be run to the subway loop. If the present space of 13 feet 6 inches is not enlarged it will not allow for any railroad connection with such future subways, and will make it impossible for any of the present railroads in Queens to reach Manhattan via the Williamsburg Bridge and subway loop.

"The plans for the loop also provided for a double-deck subway in part, and for the use of grades frequently as high as 4 per cent., and in some instances as high as 5 1-2 per cent. The steepness of these grades and the frequency with which they follow one another in the loop will not only greatly increase the cost of operation, but limit materially the number of trains that can be run through the subway in a given period, and increase the possibility of accidents.

Suggests Changes.

"Our chief engineer, Mr. Seaman, after careful study of the problem, has found that it is possible to modify the plans for the subway loop so as to increase the height of the tunnel, to modify the grades, to decrease their number, and to do away with the double deck stations and tracks. To make these changes it will be necessary to change two of the stations and in order to make proper connection with the crosstown line in Canal street. It is proposed to unite the two stations at Leonard-Franklin street and at Howard-Grand street, into one station at Canal street.

"It is also proposed to operate the loop as two double-track railroads, instead of one four-track road, but with cross covers to be used in case of accident, or when needed for the shunting of trains. Eventually this might lead to the connection of the Williamsburg Bridge with the Brooklyn Bridge, which would naturally serve the purpose of the elevated roads in Brooklyn when connect with these two bridges.

"The other set of tracks would be operated in connection with the Manhattan Bridge, through the proposed terminal at Chambers street, and thence down William or Nassau, crossing the East River by a tunnel and connecting with some future subway in Brooklyn. This loop would naturally serve the Fourth avenue subway, and could be operated there in conjunction with or entirely independent of the loop perviously described."

CAUGHT AFTER TWO YEARS' CHASE ON MURDER CHARGE

Alexander Cigiglio, wanted on two charges of murder by the Nassau County authorities, was arrested today by the police of Toronto, Ont. It is charged that Cigiglio shot and killed two Italians in a row over a card game at Mineola on Christmas Eve, 1905.

When Cigiglio was taken in custody by the Canadian detectives a loaded 38-calibre revolver was found in an outside pocket. He also carried a razor and stiletto. The police seized a trunk in his room, and besides finding a long butcher knife sharpened to a razor edge they got evidence which convinced them that they had arrested the man wanted in the case.

The District-Attorney of Nassau County has been notified, and he will confer with the Federal authorities tomorrow for the extradition of Cigiglio. He was employed as a laborer by the Long Island Railroad at the time of the double killing, and his victims worked as farmhands.
