Dandy Seventh Has Excellent Athletic Material in the Ranks

Pilgrim, Jones, Sheldon, Anderson and Broadhead a Few of the Stars Who Have Made the "7" Famous on Track and Field.

EFFORTS to make a list of the achievements of New York's military athletes without chalking up the good work of the boys of the "Dandy Seventh" would be in short a rank injustice. In times gone by, and at present, too, the Seventh has had on its roster some of the most famous athletes in the country.

Look over your Athletic Almanac and you will read often the names of C. H. Mc[illegible]all, one of the cleverest sailors Columbia University has had; T. K. Baxter, many times champion in the high jump; Sam Jones, one of the most consistent jumpers this country ever saw; Dick Sheldon, football player, shot putter and what not in the athletic line; Gordon Browne, captain of the great eleven that added the blue of Old Eli to the football pennant mast in 1909, and a score more.

Of all the present day Seventh athletes Paul H. Pilgrim is the most noted. Pilgrim's fame was heaped upon his shoulders all of a sudden, and came as much of a surprise to himself as to the rest of the athletic world. He went to Athens with the American team as a "goat." On the way over it was planned to have Pilgrim go out and kill off the foreign runners so that Hallman, Moulton, Lightbody and Valentine, in the first string men of the Yankee team, could outsprint them in the stretch.

Pilgrim Saved the Day.

Everybody knows what happened. Pilgrim saved the day for America in the 400-metre race with as thrilling a sprint as was ever seen on any track, and followed it up two days later by winning the 1500-metre race from Lightbody by a hair's width. At the Seventh's games to-night Pilgrim will try to duplicate his Athens sprint and set up a new 440-yard record.

Sam Jones, though out of competitive work now, is still a Seventh man. Jones won so many Olympic, American, Canadian, Metropolitan, etc., championships that a list of them is almost monotonous to read. He was without a doubt one of the most lovable high jumpers America has ever known. Perfect in one's style at all times, no matter in what conditions he was, and when in shape "six three" was Sam's normal mark.

Just to illustrate what a jumper Jones was it is interesting to record here that one morning at Travers Island, while the athletes were waiting for breakfast, Sam put up the bar at six feet and cleared it the first hop. And this while clad in long trousers, a heavy sweater and tennis shoes, and jumping off of grass covered with a heavy dew.

Neither Jones nor his side partner, Dick Sheldon, ever failed a day in their lives. Had they done so goodness only knows what the records in their respective events would be now. As least so say the experts. No man alive—not even Ralph Rose—ever showed the speed and form with the 16-pound shot that Big Dick Did. Had a trigonometry and hard there is little doubt that the record would be well over fifty feet to-day.

Sheldon is known as one of the handsomest men in New York, and occupies to-day the proud berth as color sergeant, and is chief electrician of the regiment as well.

Another athlete in the Seventh who has shone here and there in the amateur world is A. G. Anderson, of the N. Y. A. C. A few years ago Anderson overtopped all the pole vaulters in America, and now he is a sabre expert, holding the national championship medal for the Jones swords.

Then there's Sam Thomas, the former K. A. C. athlete. Before he acquired the dignity of shoulder straps Thomas used to vault and top the hurdles with the best of them. At the dual meet with the Twenty-third Regiment a couple of years ago Thomas ran "Ajax" Northridge one of the hardest races over the hurdles the Brooklyn champion ever raced.

Andrews Not Overlooked.

A seventh man who has made his mark in open competition is Victor Andrews. As a member of the Pastime A. C. Andrews won many a sliding spirit. He was the fastest sprinter in the mid-Atlantic outside of the college cracks latterly of the N. Y. A. C. Andrews, though not competing at present, maintains his interest in athletics as secretary of the Pastime A. C. Dave Darlington, of the Eighth Company, shines in the sick races and sprints. In open games he is "Hart" and as such ran a Person the Twenty-second and Jim Ralph Wainwright, of the Twelfth, and Jim McCaddin, of the Seventy-first.

One of the gamest boys in the Seventh is E. L. Bradhead. This athlete climbs a little of everything at times that his regiment's mates are at strike that there is no chance he will not take to win. At the dual meet in 1906 between the Seventh and Twenty-third, Broadhead, in order to make sure of a place in one of the dashes flung himself at the tape so hard that he never stopped until he brought up against the brick wall with a resounding slap. Result—a broken arm and dislocated elbow joint.

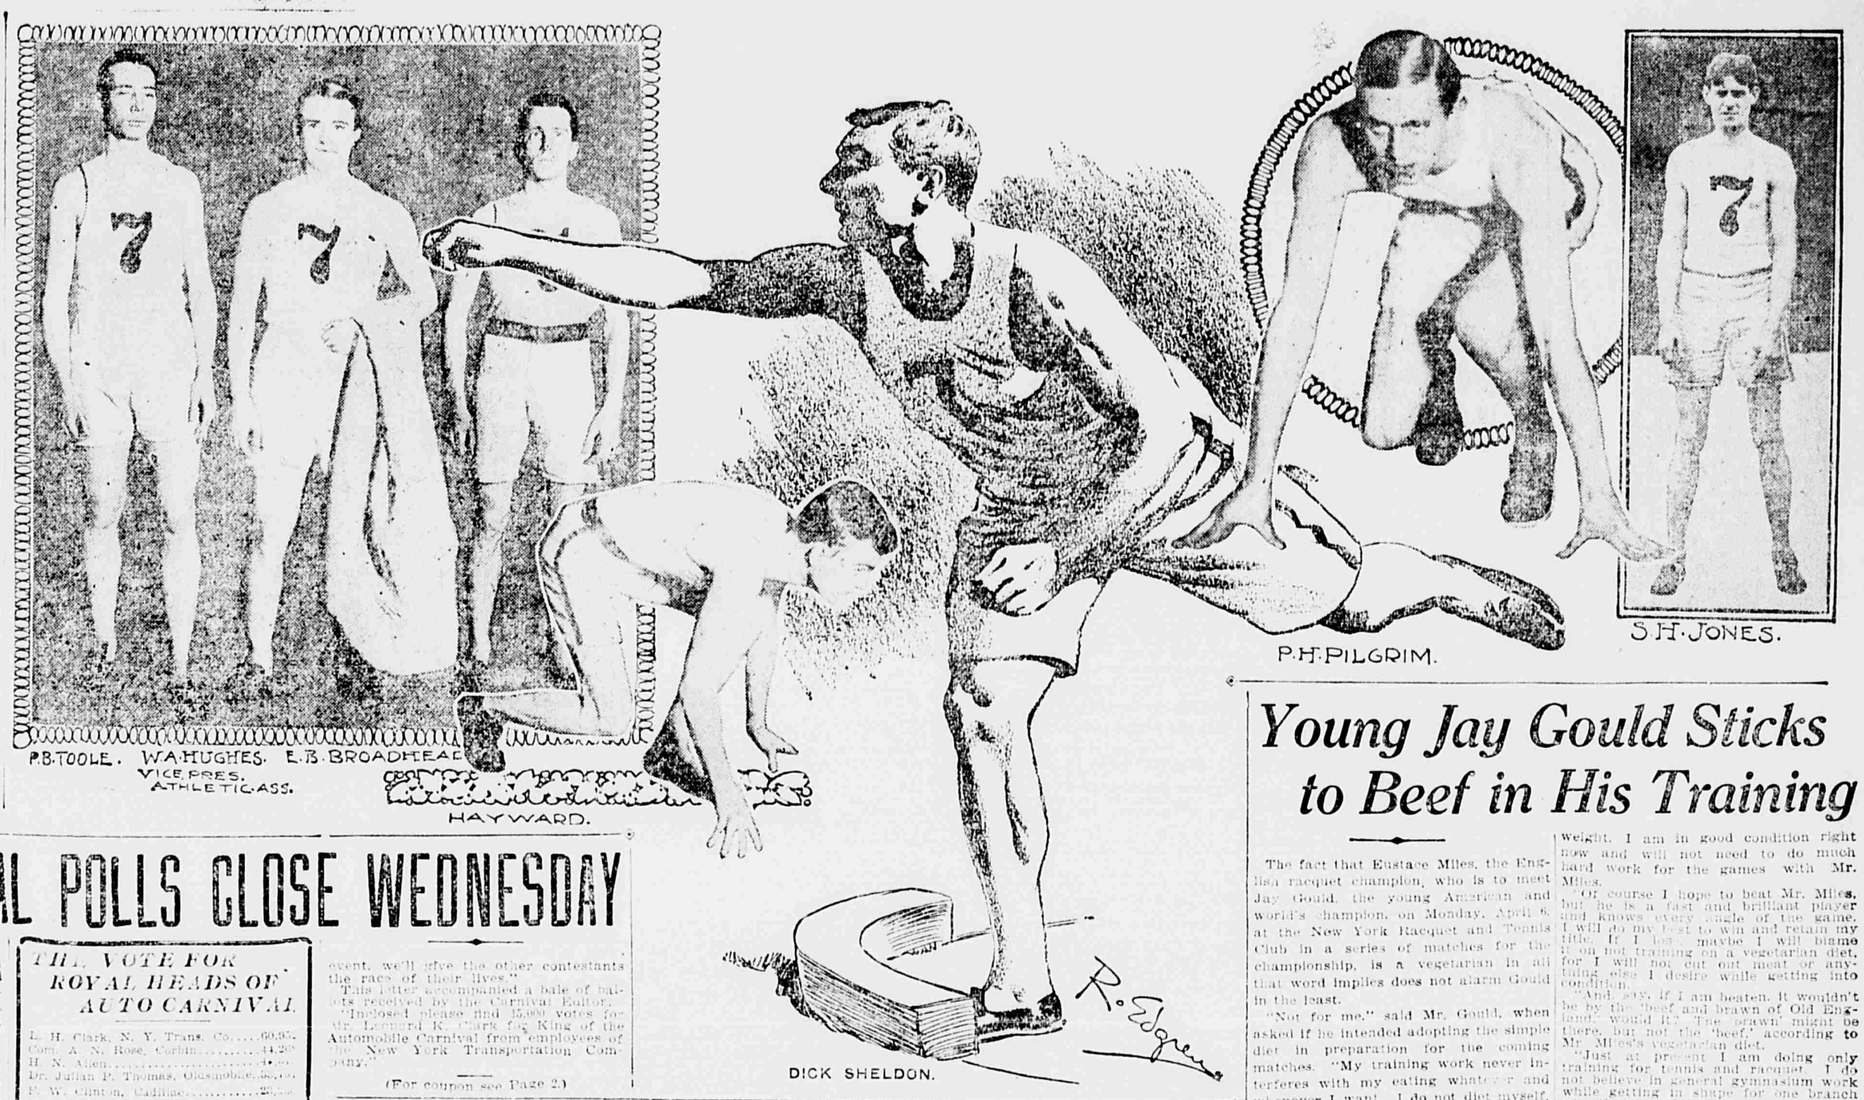
Another daredevil Seventh lad is Walter Hughes, the regiment's all-around champion. Hughes can run, swim, hurdle, jump and some say weigh his weight in rattle snakes. Then there's Johnny Sterns, who, if he cared to try, could easily develop himself into one of the finest sprinters and quarter-milers in the land.

Few athletes better known in their day than Paul Doll, the former Fifth Company athlete. Doll won all kinds of trophies and jumps under the colors of the Wee Y. M. C. A. and organized a rival team in that club that dearly upset the experts' hopes by defeating the champion Yale University team at the N. Y. A. C. fall meet in 1907.

Doll is a pretty good man that can keep in fast company in vaulting, swimming, tennis, hockey and football, but this is the pace Marshall Peabody, of the Seventh Regiment and N. Y. A. C., holds. No matter what time of year it happens to be, look in the paper and you will see Peabody's name in some "line-up."

How Can You Beat 'Em?

Eddie Blackledge, of the Fifth Company, sprints in open games for the St. Bartholomew's Club, like Paul Doll. Eddie is a Y. M. C. A. product. He has a string of prizes won in the short dashes that would make many a champion covetous. If late Blackledge has grown so big that when he sprints across the armory floor his mates fear that the beams will give way.



AUTO CARNIVAL POLLS CLOSE WEDNESDAY

WITH only four days remaining in the heated race for King and Queen of the Automobile Carnival, the leaders, six of them for King, are coming down the homestretch neck and neck for the wire.

The votes are coming in in such avalanches now that the work of counting taxes the physical power of the Board of Canvassers, and it has been found necessary to put a time limit on the reception of votes.

No ballots will be received hereafter after 2 P. M.

This warning should be heeded, for those who violate the rule will have to take their ballots away again, to return them with the next day's vote.

Leonard K. Clark's vote of 60,952, giving him a lead of 13,051, affords an object lesson in the value of system when results are insisted upon. Julian Howard, manager of the campaign for Mr. Clark, delegated to the work by the 1,000 employees of the New York Transportation Company, of which Mr. Clark is superintendent, gathered about him a campaign committee, with a secretary and a treasurer, and there have been mass-meetings of the employees in the left of the big taxicab garage at Eighth avenue and Forty-ninth street, where speeches were made and plans of campaign discussed. Every man had his own particular field to canvass, like the election district captains in the Tammany Hall organization. Results had to come. One man heard his wife say Mrs. McGavan, in the Bronx, was going to have the sewing society at her house next day.

"Tell them the boss is out for King of the Carnival, and that your husband and the rest of the men are working for him," said the husband. "Ask them to cut the coupon ballots out of their Evening Worlds, fill in the name of Leonard K. Clark and send them to us."

Next day the sewing society voted seventy-six ballots for Mr. Clark, and [illegible] seen sending in its share in Mr. Clark's big vote.

Manager Howard also set an endless chain going through the mails, and it yielded many votes.

Commodore Rose Is Confident.

There has been systematic work, too, in behalf of Commodore A. N. Rose, in which committees of the Audubon Club of the Blue Lodge Community and Mystic Shriners and the Corbin Motor Company have been active, with flattering results.

"The election is not over until noon on Tuesday next, I believe," said Dan Harrington, manager for the Corbin Company, with a confident smile, "and you can put it down that Commodore Rose and his new Corbin Comet will be in at the finish. We shall boost the Commodore in fine shape. He is a Corbin enthusiast. He is a good fellow and very popular. He lives at the Hotel Woodward and has an Harlem for his friends. He's in a manufacturing business downtown and has a host of business friends. He's a yachtsman and a clubman. He's a winner.

"Every member of the automobile trade ought to thank The Evening World for the work it has done and for the interest it promoted in popularizing the carnival. The trade already feels that the season is opening about a month earlier than usual."

"The Comet was designed and built by the Corbin Company especially for Mr. Rose," said Commodore Rose to-day, "and is entered for the races to be held in Bronxville Manor, Westchester County, April 24. I claim that the Comet is the fastest thing on wheels, and I hope to win not only the race for Evening World ballots, but the beautiful Briarcliff trophy as well. In any event, we'll give the other contestants the race of their lives."

This letter accompanied a bale of ballots received by the Carnival Editor:

"Inclosed please find 15,000 votes for Mr. Leonard K. Clark for King of the Automobile Carnival from employees of the New York Transportation Company."

HANS WAGNER MAY YET RECONSIDER

(Special to The Evening World.)

PITTSBURG, March 28.—Local fans are joyous over the report from what is regarded as an authoritative source that Hans Wagner has reconsidered and will be found wearing a Buccaneer uniform when the season opens. The celebrated shortstop is said to have yielded to the entreaties of his friends and quietly made known to Chairman Clarke that he will get in the game again, if not at the beginning of the season, soon after the Pirates have tried out their present material.

This morning Wagner would not discuss the report, but close friends say there is every probability that he will be found with Clark's crew in the near future. Wagner was repeatedly importuned to change his mind, and the argument that the Pirate's chances of finishing better than third or fourth without the Dutchman were not bright appealed to his pride. His well-known friendship for President Dreyfuss was another contributing cause to the change of mind.

Wagner's word that he would get in the game was mailed to Clarke early this week, according to report, which the southpaw did not deny.

Young Jay Gould Sticks to Beef in His Training

The fact that Eustace Miles, the English racquet champion, who is to meet Jay Gould, the young American and world's champion, on Monday, April 6, at the New York Racquet and Tennis Club in a series of matches for the championship, is a vegetarian in all that word implies does not alarm Gould in the least.

"Not for me," said Mr. Gould, when asked if he intended adopting the simple diet in preparation for the coming matches. "My training work never interferes with my eating whatever and whenever I want. I do not diet myself, never have and never intend to do so. I do not smoke, but in other respects I go along the same way while training as when out of training.

"Just now for the coming matches with Mr. Miles I am working two-hour sessions of three times a week, mainly on the courts at Lakewood. I am playing a few outside matches at different clubs. Of course, the actual playing is by no means all the work necessary for a hard match like the ones with Mr. Miles will be.

"I spend a great deal of time out of doors, but do little running. I find that I can get all the exercise I need to strengthen my breathing apparatus and limbs by running around the courts in practice games. One has to move pretty frequently and rapidly there, you know.

"I ride horseback a great deal and consider it a most beneficial exercise, as it helps develop all the muscles and also serves to keep one at proper weight. I am in good condition right now and will not need to do much hard work for the games with Mr. Miles.

"Of course I hope to beat Mr. Miles, but he is a fast and brilliant player and knows every angle of the game. I will do my best to win and retain my title. If I lose, maybe I will blame it on bad training on a vegetarian diet, for I will not cut out meat or anything else I desire while getting into condition.

"And, say, if I am beaten, it wouldn't be by the 'beef and brawn of Old England,' would it? The 'brawn' might be there, but not the 'beef,' according to Mr. Miles's vegetarian diet.

"Just at present I am doing only training for tennis and racquet. I do not believe in general gymnasium work while getting in shape for one branch of athletics. On that account I am getting a trifle behind on my gymnasium work and Columbia College and as a certain amount of work is required before I can secure my degree, I will have to work harder after my contests with Miles.

"At present I am working for those only, and will be in a fine shape when we meet at the Racquet and Tennis Club next month."
