W. D. Rumer, western Nebraska

distributor for the Crow-Elkhart line of automobiles, better known to his many friends as "Bill", was out one day in a Crow auto the first of the week accompanied by his old friend Simon Spry. In some manner the car radiator outlet became clogged, with the result that when the car began to get warm while climbing a dry sand hill in going from lake to lake, steam was created in the aforesaid radiator and there was some pressure. Pretty soon this steam had to have an outlet and being unable to force its way through the radiator, which is strong and sturdy, it just simply blew out the center of the radiator cap, throwing a column of steam and water "about fifty feet in the air". This was too much for Simon, who dismounted from the car and trudged along behind until Bill assured him that there was no danger of their being blown into "kingdom come" and that a little thing like that was nothing to what a Crow car could accomplish if it once got busy.

Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Crouse who for a week were the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. K. J. Stearn, departed Monday for their home at McCool Junction. They made the trip in their car.
