Made Trouble for Jones.

A bunch of young fellows in Topeka have a poker club. Once a week they get together and play a little penny game, at which none can either lose or win very much. For convenience, one of the number will be called Jones, which is not his label in the directory. Jones' wife didn't want him to go, but he finally pacified her by telling her that he would give her all his winnings of that evening's play, and would also be home by 11 o'clock. He played four hours and won $1.85. Just as soon as he got home he handed over his winnings.

About 15 minutes later the rest of the crowd wandered home by Jones' house. One of them stopped under the Joneses' bedroom window.

"I'll bet," he said, plenty loud enough for Mrs. Jones to hear, "I'll just bet that old dog Jones gave his wife about $1.85, and said he won that, and then stacked the other $45 that he cleaned us fellows for."

Jones is still trying to convince his wife that he only won $1.85, but she is holding out for that $45. The thing stands in statu quo with the rest of the poker club grinning out loud.—Kansas City Journal.

A Sea Story.

"Of all my sea experiences," said the captain, "this was the strangest."

The ladies at the handsome captain's table said hush to one another, turned to the ruddy mariner with listening smiles.

"We were carrying," he said, "a lot of troop horses. A dreadful storm overtook us, and for two days we wallowed in the trough of a heavy sea. Finally it was decided that, to lighten the ship, the horses must go overboard.

"They went overboard in the morning. As soon as they saw that they were abandoned they turned and began to swim bravely after us. Bravely, desperately they swam. They followed us for miles and miles. I can still see them, a long line, their necks arched, pushing heroically through the heavy sea.

"They sank, poor brutes, one by one."

The captain smiled sadly.

"And I still seem to have," he said, "all those deaths on my conscience."

Building Up National Capital.

It is the migratory American that is swelling the population of the national capital, just as it was the migratory American that conquered the west, that helped to people western Canada, that is building the big canal down on the isthmus, educating the Filipino, supporting the bonifaces and the nobility of Europe and trying to discover the north pole.

It is the migratory American that does things and a great many of them go to Washington to do them, because here is the opportunity to do them.

Length.

Rivers—No; I've no time to go and play golf. Can't you see I'm up to my ears in work?

Brooks—Yes, but that leaves a considerable margin unoccupied. Better come, old man.—Chicago Tribune.
