CORONER'S JURY SCORES OFFICIALS OF A HOSPITAL

Says Presbyterian Authorities Broke Law in Sending the Dying Man to Bellevue.

The authorities of Presbyterian Hospital were severely censured by the Coroner's Jury which before Coroner Harburger to-day inquired into the death of James O'Connor, who was struck by an automobile on Jan. 4. The jury rebuked the officials of the hospital and declared that a statute had been violated by their removal of a man fatally injured to another institution. Soon after the transfer of O'Connor to Bellevue Hospital he died as a result of his injuries.

The verdict brought in by the jury was as follows:

"That the said James O'Connor came to his death on the sixth day of January, 1909, at Bellevue Hospital by fractured ribs and pneumonia caused on or about the fourth day of January, 1909, by being struck by an automobile, and we find that the authorities of Presbyterian Hospital violated a statute of the State of New York by transferring said patient to Bellevue Hospital in the condition in which said patient was at the time of the transfer."

No Beds, He Said.

Dr. C. Irving Fischer, superintendent of the Presbyterian Hospital, was called as a witness. He read the history of the case, which showed that O'Connor, a waiter, fifty-four years of age, lived at No. 329 East Seventy-second street. When the ambulance was taken into the institution he was suffering from fractured ribs contusions and sensibility. The order for the trasfer, he said, was given by Dr. Young.

"There were no beds to put the patient in," Dr. Fischer gave as his reason for the transfer. He said he did not believe that he had violated any statute under the circumstances.

Another of the hospital's physicians, Dr. Harry Decker, testified the patient was suffering from fractured ribs and chronic lung trouble. In authorizing the transfer he said he did not believe O'Connor was in a dying condition. Dr. Soper, an ambulance surgeon at the hospital, testified that since Jan. 1 he has transferred four or five patients to other hospitals.

The jury also heard the testimony of Dr. F. C. Clark, of Bellevue, as to the man's serious condition when admitted there.

Condition Was Dangerous.

"Would you move a man in that condition?" asked Coroner Harburger.

"I'd rather not answer," said the witness. "I might be prejudiced by the knowledge I have of this patient's case."

"Would you consider a man with five fractured ribs in a dangerous condition?" asked the Coroner.

"Yes, I would," answered Dr. Clark.

Coroner Harburger was very indignant when he charged the jury.

"The Presbyterian Hospital," he said, "is endowed by many wealthy people, and in my opinion could have retained the patient. No hospital should make any distinction between the rich and the poor, yet that seems to have been done in this case. Remember, that the man who died was merely a waiter, and you have the excuse given by Dr. Fischer that there were no beds. Then we have the testimony of Dr. Decker, who found the patient sitting on a bed. You can draw your own conclusions."

Coroner Harburger will call the matter to the attention of the Grand Jury.

"TOM" TAGGART HERE TO DEFEND SUIT FOR $5,000

Reed Carradine Asks for Damages on a Charge of False Imprisonment.

"Tom" Taggart, who was chairman of the National Democratic Committee in 1904, came from Lick Springs, Ind., to appear as defendant before Justice Louis W. Marcus, of Buffalo, who is sitting with a jury in the Supreme Court here.

The plaintiff was Reed Carradine, one of the young men who drew salaries as members of Chairman Taggart's Bureau of Publicity in that campaign. Mr. Carradine demands $5,000 from Mr. Taggart on a charge of "false arrest and imprisonment" on Sept. 22, 1905.

Mr. Carradine testified that he had had a check bearing the signature of Lew Fields. He wanted to cash it and got Mr. Taggart, who happened to be a guest at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, to introduce him to Mr. Mulligan, the cashier. Mulligan cashed the check, but afterward said he did not like the looks of it, as the body of the check, the date and the signature furnished specimens of thre different handwrites. Taggart remarked to Carradine that he didn't wan to get Mulligan into trouble. He asked Carradine to make the check good and called the house detective, who took him in tow.

That constituted the "false arrest" of the complaint.

The house detective escorted Carradine around while he tried to get back the money he had paid out of the proceeds of the check, and they visited Lew Fields's Theatre and got the actor's brother's statement that the signature on the check was really and truly the sign manual of Lew Fields. All this took from 6.30 to 10.30 o'clock P. M.

That consituted the "false imprisonment" complained of.

Then Mr. Taggart took the stand.

"I did ask Mr. Carradine to make sure the check was good," said Mr. Taggart. "I did not know he wanted a check cashed when I introduced him to Mulligan, but having introduced him I felt a sort of responsibility in the matter."

Fred W. Thornhill, the house detective, testified that he accompanied Carradine in his quest for the money he had paid out and also to Lew Fields's Theatre. He said Carraline was not in his custody.

The case was given to the jury.
