SCHOOL BOY TAKES POISON IN DARK, SUICIDE ALLEGED

Report That Twelve-Year-Old Louis Faupel Was Despondent Over His Studies.

While the police report the death of the twelve-year-old Louis Faupel of No. 1322 Putnam street, Brooklyn, as suicide, his parents declared to-day that it was an accident due to mistaking a bottle of insect poison for toothache medicine.

Louis, the son of Charles Faupel, a barber, died at midnight from a mixture of carbolic acid and creosote, after doctors had worked over him for two hours.

The boy was one of the brightest and most popular pupils in Public School No. 9, in Jefferson avenue near Bedford avenue. He stood highest in his class, and his teacher, Miss M. A. Crossman, was very proud of him. His fellow pupils also thought a great deal of him, and when he celebrated his birthday on March 29 attended in a body.

Recently his teacher went to Lakewood, N. J., to recuperate from an attack of illness, and asked Louis to act as a sort of monitor to assist the substitute teacher. He was pleased a day or two ago to get a post card from her praising him for his work and asking him to continue to help all he could.

The parents tell all this to show that the boy had every reason to love life and no reason to want to die. Yesterday afternoon he came home suffering from a toothache. His mother gave him some drops from the medicine chest and the pain soon left him.

SAY HE TOOK POISON BY MISTAKE IN THE DARK.

He went to bed at 8 o'clock last night, but about 10 o'clock his tooth began to ache again. He got up and found that his mother was in the bathroom; so he went to the medicine chest to get the bottle himself.

In a few minutes he ran to the bathroom door screaming:

"Mamma, mamma, I must have taken poison. I thought it was the toothache drops. I took the bottle and drank some of it."

He sank to the floor in convulsions. His father had not come home, and his mother called in Policeman Cahill of the Atlantic avenue station, who got Dr. B. C. Thorne, of No. 2 Macon street. [illegible]

Investigations showed that the boy took a bottle of bedbug medicine which had been in the chest since 1907, instead of the toothache drops. It was thought that Louis had been afraid he would pass in the approaching examinations at school and that this so weighed on his mind he decided in a moment of despondency to drink the poison, but his parents say there was no foundation for such a report.

The police could not understand why a person trying to use toothache medicine should swallow enough carbolic acid and creosote solution to cause death, however, and called it a case of suicide.

L. H. White, principal of School No. 3, said to-day that young Faupel was one of the brightest and most cheerful pupils they had. They boy had missed but half a day during the term and had never been late to school. His standing was such, the principal declared, that had he left school now the authorities would have had to promote him on his excellent record. So there was nothing about his studies to have caused him to end his life.

The boy was to have taken his first communion in the Church of the Nativity to-day, and last night before going to bed had industriously studied his catechism.

SHE JUMPED TO ESCAPE.

Woman Injured in Getting Away From Four Men in a Room.

While on post nearby early this morning, Policeman Brown heard screams at No. 507 West Thirty-sixth street and found a woman lying in the areaway, unable to rise. She said she was Helen Mader, forty-five, of No. 401 West Thirty-seventh street, and had jumped out of the first floor window of No. 507 to escape five men.

Dr. Victor took the woman to the New York Hospital. Her left leg was broken in two places.

Patrolman Brown arrested Bert Holzhauser, twenty-nine, a sausagemaker, whom he found in the first floor room with four other men.

Holzhauser said he met the Mader woman in the street, and declared that after a few drinks she had become noisy and had toppled out of the window accidentally.

An Unusual Order.

BULLET OVER HEART FOR LAD WHO RAN TO SEE FRIEND FIGHT

Nine-Year-Old Benjamin Fisher Hit by Bullet Fired by One of Battling Boys.

An operation was performed early to-day in the Long Island Hospital on Benjamin Fisher, nine years old, of No. 82 Sullivan street, Brooklyn, to remove a bullet from his breast, and the doctors expressed the opinion that he would recover.

The boy was sitting on the steps of his home last night when Charles Sicken, eighteen, of No. 78 Sullivan street, became involved in a quarrel with a youth of seventeen named Ambrigo, of No. 170 Sullivan street.

The Sicken boy and Benjamin are good friends, and the latter remarked to his mother, who was sitting by him:

"Gee, it looks like Charlie's getting his."

Benjamin jumped from the steps and ran toward Sullivan and Van Brunt streets, where the fight was going on, but had gone only a few steps when Ambrigo drew a revolver and fired at Sicken. The bullet went wild and struck Benjamin above the heart.

He fell and his mother rushed to him and carried him into the house. Dr. Lesser was called and took him to the hospital, where his wound was found not to be as dangerous as had been supposed. A general alarm has been sent out for Ambrigo, who has not been found.

Inconceivable.
