MURDER FOR HIRE REVEALED BY NEW STORIES OF THUGS

Perkins Now Thinks That Paid Assassination Is a Lost Profession.

TRAIL TO LABOR HEADS.

Scores of Them Involved in Confession "Joe the Greaser" Makes.

The confession of Joseph Rosenzweig, otherwise known as "Joe the Greaser," notorious east side gangster and originator of strong arm methods in disposing of strike breakers, now being made to District Attorney Perkins and the latter's assistants, Royal H. Weller and Lucien Breckendridge, will result, according to these officials, in the arrest and conviction of scores of labor leaders for assault and conspiracy.

Rosenzweig is awaiting sentence by Supreme Court Justice Shearn for manslaughter in the first degree. He pleaded guilty late Friday evening, after having made a long statement to Mr. Perkins, laying bare the circumstances surrounding a large number of shootings.

Many of these shootings occurred during the strike of the Furriers' Union three years ago, and resulted in the maiming of a number of strike breakers. In one or two instances, according to the authorities, deaths ensued as the result of these assaults.

Following the revelations made by Benjamin Fein, otherwise "Dopey Benny," as to the work of gangsters in behalf of labor unions, and whose story resulted in the indictment of eight men for murder in the first degree and twenty-six others for minor crimes, Mr. Perkins believes that organized crime in this city is ended.

"Statements made not only by Rosenzweig but by others," Mr. Perkins said to-day, "demonstrate what the police officials of this city have long contended, that murder has been a purchasable commodity in this community. The conviction for murder in the first degree of Gaetano Montimagno, the tool of those who wanted a man removed, and the conviction of Angelo Leggio, who was willing to pay a price for a death of a rival, has done much to put a stop to this nefarious business.

"Rosenzweig's story, coming so quickly after the story told by Fein, has thrown much light on the subject. It was through these men and others now under surveillance that murderers could be obtained. The conditions as revealed by both Rosenzweig and Fein are shocking."

The indictment to which Rosenzweig pleaded guilty charged him with having procured "Benny" Snyder, a gangster, to kill Philip Paul, another gangster, known as "Pinchy," in front of No. 109 Norfolk Street, May 11, 1914. Snyder pleaded guilty and revealed Rosenzweig's part in the murder. Snyder said that Rosenzweig had promised him a bonus for the killing of Paul.

Although only twenty-four years old Rosenzweig has long been a gangster. He started in at the age of sixteen by organizing school boys into separate organizations for the purpose of theft, he grabbing all the loot. At the time of his arrest he was the leader of the largest gang on the East Side. According to Mr. Perkins, Rosenzweig was the first of the gang leaders who made it a business of trafficking in thugs and furnishing men, for pay, to do murder or assault.

Rosenzweig's confession so far deals with his relation with labor union leaders. Like "Dopey Benny" he has given dates and details of all the assaults that he was hired to commit, and of the shops he and his minions wrecked at the instigation of those who employed him.

Much of the story has been corroborated by detectives working under the direction of Max D. Sulkess of No. 304 Broadway, who obtained the corroboration of many of the crimes which "Dopey Benny" revealed. Sulkess has a group of detectives working under the guidance of Assistant District Attorney Breckenridge and Central Office Detective Clinton Wood. Some of these sleuths are not only members of the labor unions involved, but are members of different gangs scattered throughout the city.
