COLONIAL LANDMARK GONE.

Halley-Hudson Place in Connecticut, 200 Years Old, Demolished.

(Special to The Evening World.)

STAMFORD, Conn., Sept. 29.—Because she did not want any one else to ever live in the house in which she had spent her life, Mrs. Hudson left directions in her will that the old Halley-Hudson place, on Park Place, in this town, Workmen have just finished the demolition of the old house, one wing of which was 200 years old.

In those days of flimsy construction the carefully framed hardwood timbers, some of them 8 by 14 inches, which were thought necessary at that time look old enough. A peculiar feature of the chimney, built of field stones and clay, was the opening of the old-fashioned brick oven, which was directly in the back of the kitchen fireplace.

Considerable interest was shown in the old chimney, as there was a rumor of a box buried in the side of it, but all of value that was found was an English halfpenny.

THE NEW PLAYS

Grace George Essentially Feminine in "The New York Idea."

BY CHARLES DARNTON.

IN her clean-cut, thoroughbred way Grace George, at the Playhouse last night, again emphasized the fact that she is a comedienne who puts heart as well as skill into her work. And this, if you stop to think about it, is a very difficult trick to turn.

It was not as a challenge to Mrs. Fiske, I am sure, that Miss George gave herself up to "The New York Idea," brought out some nine or ten years ago by the actress whose name is associated with the best that the American stage can boast. Even Mrs. Fiske made very little of the idea that forms the basis of Langdon Mitchell's comedy. After all, to get a divorce as you run from one altar to another is rather old-fashioned sport in the light of the theatre. The game offers little novelty to New York, not to mention other progressive cities.

Just why Miss George should have chosen "The New York Idea" in assuming her responsibilities as actress-manager of the Playhouse is, perhaps, a business matter that concerns only herself. But something tells me it was love of the theatre, not the business of it, that led her to take Mr. Mitchell's familiar play to her professional heart. Her acting gave every reason for her choice. She saw in it, evidently, a clever woman's opportunity to twist a divorced husband around her little finger. This, in short, is what Miss George does with the ease and the charm of an actress who knows every inch of the stage beneath her feet. She can be absolutely cold-blooded about marrying a man who represents nothing more than a legal opinion and at the same time turn back to the chap who, in the end, discovers that her divorce will not stand the acid test.

This, in a word or two, is the play, as you may happen to remember it. It means nothing more than a legal slip. Applied to every-day life it would doubtless be very pleasant from time to time. Looking hard domestic facts in the face, however, it must be confessed that Mr. Mitchell's comedy seems even more artificial today than it did years ago. In speaking of divorce the revered gentleman who has his boy choir of "angel voices" ready for action now substitutes Reno for Sioux Falls. Otherwise the play remains as chaste and pure as when the clerical interlocutor first explained the strange workings of the system. All this, it goes without saying, must be taken as farce.

But Miss George had evidently fixed her eyes and her heart on a higher goal and she reached it by sheer force of womanly feeling. Her one error was to put too little comedy into her earlier scenes. In the second act particularly she forgot to impress her audience with the fact that she is first and last a comedienne. Later she rose with all the brightness of the "war brides" of the present enthusiastic stock market and carried her audience into at least the seventh domestic heaven of delight. It will be a pleasure to see this keen and gifted actress-manager in the other plays she has up her artistic sleeve for the Playhouse.

Though quite out of her usual line of work, Mary Nash gave a strikingly good performance as the artificial, languishing Mrs. Phillimore, who knew her divorce lesson by heart. Miss Nash might easily lure any man to his doom. Ernest Lawford was engagingly clever as an Englishman who took a broad view of the American matrimonial horizon, and Lumsden Hare played the disappointed bridegroom with the heavy seriousness that the part demanded. In the role of the lucky husband who won back his wife Conway Tearle acted with good grace.

Now, more than ever before, "The New York Idea" suggests a good imitation of Wilde and Pinero. The main point is that it is clever enough to be thoroughly entertaining. Miss George makes the most of it by being essentially feminine.

Baroness de Beckendorff Here.

Baroness de Beckendorff, wife of Lieut. Baron A. R. de Beckendorff of the Russian army, arrived yesterday at the Biltmore to pass the winter. She has had no word from her husband since he was summoned home, early in July, to join his regiment, just called out for active service. The Baroness was Miss Gertrude Orr, a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles A. Orr of Kentucky, and she and her husband were spending their honeymoon at Lake George when the Baron got his orders from Petrograd.

GOV. SPRY'S DAUGHTER WEDDED UNDER GUARD

Detectives Watch Nuptials in Salt Lake Because of Threats From I. W. W.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Sept. 29.—Fearing that the I. W. W. sympathizers with Joseph Hillstrom, condemned murderer, might attempt to carry out some of their threats, Secret Service men and detectives guarded every entrance to the grounds yesterday while Gov. Spry's eldest daughter was being married in the Salt Lake Temple of the Mormon Church. The officials surrounded the bridal party from the time it left the Governor's mansion until it returned and remained on duty after the reception.

The guard will be kept on duty until after Hillstrom's execution or until his sentence is commuted. The Governor won't interfere unless some cause for commutation can be shown.

Threatening letters continue to arrive, and one from Chicago threatened wholesale arson, dynamite and murder unless the evidence was sufficient before to expect the execution to set for Friday next.
