J. D. Rockefeller Reported to Have Subscribed $10,000,000 to Allies' Funds.

FOREIGN AID REJECTED.

British and French Investors Sought to Share in the High Interest.

J. P. Morgan & Co. made the following announcement to-day:

"In behalf of the managers of the underwriting syndicate of the Anglo-French external loan, J. P. Morgan & Co. announce that no subscriptions toward the underwriting will be received after 10 o'clock to-morrow morning."

The success of the loan, therefore, would seem to be assured.

John D. Rockefeller is reported to have subscribed $10,000,000 to the $500,000,000 required.

Overtures looking toward Mr. Rockefeller's participation were made about two weks ago by J. P. Morgan, who called on John D. Rockefeller jr., and discussed the proposed terms of the loan. It became known shortly afterward that other Standard Oil millionaires had been consulted with a view to having them participate. The National City Bank, whose President, Frank A. Vanderlip, has taken a leading part in the loan negotiations, is reputed to have strong Rockefeller affiliations, and this gave color to the report that Mr. Rockefeller had subscribed to the loan.

After Mr. Morgan had called at the Rockefeller offices, it was said authoratively that Mr. Rockefeller would regard the big loan purely as a business transaction. It is assumed that Mr. Rockefeller's subscription was made with this in mind. As an underwriter he could secure the bonds at 96 1-4, which would result in an interest yield of nearly 6 per cent.

There is small likelihood that Mr. Rockefeller's participation will ever be announced, unless he sees fit to anounce it. The syndicate managers have decided not to make public the list of large individual subscribers on the grounds that these subscribers are their client, and that to talk of their affairs would be a breach of confidence.

Subscriptions for the loan continued to pour in to-day. Among those seeking to subscribe were a number of British and French citizens residing abroad. These investors sought the bonds because the rate of interest is a full 1 per cent. higher than that on the previous internal loans. In every case, however, their subscriptions were rejected to-day, although indications were that an appreciable amount of the bonds could have been disposed of in England and France. To do so, however, would defeat the object for which the credit was established—the stabilization of exchange, which requires that the money for the bonds be available in this country.

The foreign orders came by cable and from the New York financial agents of London and Paris houses with wealthy clienteles.

MASKED TRAIN ROBBERS HOLD UP PASSENGERS

Two Go Through Observation Car and Get $250—Escape and Dodge Bullets Fired After Them.

ST. PAUL, Oct. 4.—Passengers in the observation car of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway's fast Pacific Coast train, the "Olympia," east bound for St. Paul and Chicago, were robbed of $250 in cash by two masked men who boarded the train as it was leaving Glencoe, Minn., late last night. Passengers in other coaches fired a few shots at the robbers as they left the train in the outskirts of Minneapolis, but both disappeared into the darkness, apparently unhurt.

Wearing long raincoats and hats pulled low over faces concealed by handkerchiefs, the robbers entered the observation car about ten miles east of Glencoe, subdued Conductor J. F. McGuire, of Minneapolis, by firing two warning shots over his head, and forced him to collect money from the passengers. No jewelry was accepted and nothing was taken from the women passengers. The robbers were forced to limit their activities to the rear coach by the prompt action of Brakeman John Murphy, who locked the door of the adjoining car as soon as they appeared.

"HOW CAN I KEEP MY HUSBAND'S LOVE?" Don't Bind Him, Says One Wife

"One Who Has Accomplished the Trick" says she did it by giving him absolute freedom. Her way of keeping hubby's affections seems good, but if you have a better one, don't hesitate to let Miss Marshall know. YOU may have the real key to the secret.

One Confessed "Rounder" Turns Benedict Arnold to His Sex and Writes That No Woman Can Keep Her Husband's Love, for All Men Will Succumb, if Tempted, to the Lure of "the Time, the Place and the Girl."

By Marguerite Mooers Marshall.

"A woman must love her husband enough to give him absolute freedom, and have no desire to hold him by any other tie than his love for her and hers for him. She must let him know that this is the only tie she wishes to hold him with, and if it should no longer bind him, she must let him know that her own self-respect and the wish for his happiness would prohibit her from trying to keep him by man-made ties of law. My husband knows that he is as free as a bird, and that I would not assert claims by word or act if he gave me the slightest hint that he had ceased to love me, but there is no siren in the world who could win him away from me."

MISS MARGUERITE MARSHALL

That is the most intelligent answer I have yet received to the question, "How can I keep my husband's love?" I am not surprised that the writer signs herself "From One Who Has Accomplished the Trick." If the old paradox, "Only the free are bond and only the bond are free," ever applied to any human situation, marriage is that situation. Putting the thing on no higher grounds than sheer perversity, a husband is more likely to stay with the wife who says, "If it please you, go!" than with her who threatens, "You cannot escape me!" To a lively and intelligent human being a prohibition may have all the force of a dare.

It seems to me that the woman who loves her husband and who wants to play fair should make a covenant with herself, after this fashion: "Because I care, I will do everything in the world to make happy the man I marry. But if I fail, if he stops loving me, I will not hang around his neck like an Old Woman of the Sea. My love for him must urge me to seek first his happiness, even if it means our separation and my suffering."

WIFE MUST HAVE DEEP TRUST AND NO SUSPICION.

However, things are not likely to come to this tragic pass if the two persons begin with love and add wisdom unto it. On these matters "One Who Has Turned the Trick" has some interesting things to say, and I shall let her say them.

"If a man really loves a woman when he marries her, it is entirely the woman's fault in nine out of ten cases if he does not continue to love her always. Of course in this day we must know that there are many men as well as women that do not marry exclusively for love. Many marry just because they think it is time to settle down, and this woman is as good as any they know as a housekeeper, &c., and so on ad infinitum; but, if it was a deep love that caused the marriage, it is up to the woman to continue to inspire that love. She must have a deep trust and confidence in him and never let suspicion for a moment enter her heart. She must be interested in his work and help him in it in every possible way. The men who have wives who are interested in their work are the ones who make their wives their confidantes.

'My husband tells me all about his business and we talk things over together. I am his real partner. The woman must not be so deeply interested in housework that she cannot be fresh to amuse her husband and talk with him when he comes home, or to go out with him at any time the "spirit moves him." Any intellectual man wants a companion, not merely a housekeeper or a cook. The latter are cheaper to hire than to marry, and far less of a strain on one's disposition. A man must have a wife that he can have a better time with than with any 'cutie' that ever walked if he is to love her always. She must never cease to be interesting. She must keep up to date in every way, in current events, and also in styles.

"A man does not want an extravagant wife, but he does not want her to go to the other extreme and look as if her clothes were handed down from Mrs. Noah or Ham's wife. My husband is interested in my clothes, and I always consult him before I buy a dress or decide on the style of having it made. Men whose wives keep them always interested are not the ones who are going out after 'sirens,' and 'sirens' can do their deadliest and fail. For a man with an interesting wife has no desire for any one else in the world and knows that no one else could take the place of his wife. A woman who is wise must make her husband so happy that he wants her as much as she wants him, and then there is no longer any question of 'How can I hold my husband's love?' That question is usually asked by women who 'are asleep on the job.'

"When a woman loves a man it has often been truly said that she will do anything in the world for him, but it is just as true of a man. My husband would stick to me through hell if it were necessary, just as I would to him. Love does not 'like a wild birdling flee.' Love is the most steadfast and stable thing in the world.

"A woman must not be continually criticising a man if she wishes to retain his love. No one, man or woman, enjoys being scolded and found fault with, and just here a true little saying comes to my mind: 'A nagging woman is no worse than a nagging man, but she nags oftener.' When a woman is continually throwing cold water on a man's ambition he is going to flee from her if he gets a chance, and I do not blame him.

"A woman should never in any way deceive a man as to her disposition, likes and dislikes before marriage. She should be perfectly natural in every way, and then she knows better whether he really loves her or not. If after winning his love she is not wise enough to continue to inspire it and cause it to increase to a deeper devotion, do not condemn the man because he ceases to love a woman that makes herself unlovable.

"FROM ONE WHO HAS ACCOMPLISHED THE TRICK."

"P. S.—In case some of the disappointed ones reading this letter might say that 'she' has a husband who is a 'prude' or something of the sort, I hasten to add that my husband is a man in the highest sense of the word, is no prude in any way, shape or form, and there is not a 'sissy' hair on his head. He is up-to-date and a real, human, live man and adorable. I know as well as I know that I am on this planet this hour, that I shall keep his love till the 'end of the chapter.' I hope you will print this letter, for I wish to let some of the cynics know that it really can be done."

THINKS AVERAGE MAN A BORN SENSUALIST.

I wonder what some of the wives will say to the following letter. It is naughtily sophisticated, for a fact, and should stir up correspondents (I won't make the obvious pun) on both sides of the house.

"Dear Madam: I read your article this evening, I fear, rather cynically. I feel qualified to answer your question, as I have been a "rounder," soldier, actor, Government official and promoter for twenty years. I have travelled from coast to coast, possessed numerous 'soul mates' and affinities, and never 'overlooked a bet' up to the time of my second marriage, three years ago. If I had not taken for my second wife a woman who is 'on the job' the instant that I 'bat an eye' I would still be on the warpath with the rest of the bunch.

"The answer is, there is no way 'to keep a husband's love.' Why? For three reasons:

"1. The average man is a born sensualist.

"2. He is a prince of liars.

"3. He possesses in all its primal strength the instinct of the hunter. Who cares to shoot a tame duck in the barnyard? But the wild duck! AH! that is different.

"Given 'the time, the place and the girl,' of average attractiveness, I have never known a man of my thousands of acquaintances, of all classes, to refuse a flirtation, if he could 'get away with it.' If any male correspondent takes issue with me on this, deep down in his heart he knows he lies. Knowing that these absolute truths are treason to my sex, I will not reveal my identity, but will sign myself as my ancestral forbear,

"BENEDICT ARNOLD."

LET WOMEN BE AS PLEASING AFTER THEIR MARRIAGE.

"Dear Madam: In reference to your articles on 'How can I keep my husband's love?' the economic situation is the one big thing and the cause of fully one-third of all misunderstandings between husband and wife. But married women to-day are, nevertheless, faced by the problem, 'How can I keep my husband's love, conditions being what they are?'

"A man does not like to think that his wife is no longer as lively, as cheerful, as beautiful as she was in younger days. I say beautiful!

"Let women brace up, be clean and neat when at home as well as when out to a show or a dance.

"Let women try to prove that marriage is not hell, and husbands may possibly think it not so. The wife can do her housework and be just as clean and neat and beautiful as on other occasions. That is what women cannot get into their heads, and so when hubby comes home from business he is greatly disappointed in expecting to find everything neatly fixed up. He does not want to be bothered with housework, nor does he want to know that there is such a thing as housework, and he should not.

"Men have working hours; why have not women? Let the wife do everything between 10 and 4, so that when her husband comes home he can find everything waiting for him and his restlessness will be limited. Let a woman take as great care fixing up her home as she used to before marriage and hubby will feel like taking her for a stroll now and then. Wives should spend all spare moments cheering and making their husbands happy. That is the great aim before marriage; why not after? AARON."

WHAT'S THE "OTHER FELLOW" GOING TO DO?

"Dear Madam: Your article on 'How to Keep a Husband's Love' is very interesting to me, although I am eighteen, single and happy. My idea of harmonious matrimony is fifty-fifty in love, petting and business matters. Deliver me from the half-wit for whom a girl has to paint and powder to keep his affections. To me he is not worth the price of cosmetics. Marriage, as I see it among my friends, seems to me like driving a car. One knows the way he wants to go, but he never knows what the other fellow is going to do. A. E. P."

BROADWAY AGAIN OPEN.

Engineers Say Subway Decking Is Safe Now.

Broadway is open from end to end to-day to surface cars for the first time since the cave-in on Saturday week. The cars began to run about 2 o'clock this morning, but moved slowly over the decking at the scene of the accident at Thirty-eighth Street.

Police Inspector Schmittberger issued an order regulating traffic. It states that car traffic is resumed in Broadway from Thirty-fourth to Thirty-ninth Streets, but southbound cars may not stop at Thirty-eighth Street, and they will keep at least 100 feet apart and pay attention to flags. Crosstown traffic was resumed at Thirty-seventh Street and light vehicular traffic on Broadway from Thirty-sixth to Thirty-seventh Streets.

Subway Victim Identified.

The man killed by a train Saturday afternoon in the Broadway branch of the subway was identified yesterday as Thomas X. Shay, fifty-nine, a clerk, of No. 110 Spencer Street, Brooklyn.

TELLS HORRORS OF BEING BURIED SIX DAYS IN MINE

Nine Men Saved Were Huddled Together in Inky Darkness, Afraid to Sleep.

CRUSTS AND OIL FOOD.

Slaked Thirst With Alum Water and Time Seemed Years.

POTTSVILLE, Pa., Oct. 4.—For six days the nine coal miners who yesterday were rescued from the Foster mine tunnel at Coaldale sat huddled together in utter darkness, slacking their thirst with alum water and living on dry crusts of bread they found in their dinner pails.

Elmer Harron, the first of the men to recover sufficiently to talk, told the story to-day.

"Some of us ate the 'sunshine' that is used as oil for our lamps," said Harron. "All the time we could hear rescue crews pounding away, but they sounded so far away we didn't believe they were looking for us. We prayed continually."

The crew Herron was working with had just unloaded a car of leggings when a slide entombed them.

"The first rush of air knocked us unconscious," said Herron. "When we came too, we huddled close together and tried to find a way out. We found all four chutes cut off and then made our way to the 'monkey' where they finally found us.

"For a little while w had a light, but the black damp put it out and left us there in the darkness. There was no way of telling when night came, and it seemed like we were down there for years. Now and then I'd try to sleep, but my dreams would be so horrible I'd sit bolt upright in the darkness. It was the same story with us all.

The rescued men are now in the hospital at Coaldale and reports are that all will recover. They are Elmer Herron, Peter Lermick, Joseph Murphy, John McAndrew, Dominick Holcheck, John Bononus, Michael Bodody, Joseph Lagonis and Charles Matchakis. Two other, William Wotkins and George Holleywood, made their escape by crawling through houes in the fallen rock and coal on Tuesday.

They were rescued yesterday after 200 mine workers and company officials had battled for six days against discouraging conditions in the choked up gangway. Their task was made more difficult by a three foot stream of water which flowed from an adjourning working and which could be regulated only by the constant operation of many pumps.

Each had in his pockets several cakes of a fish oil substance that is used by mine workers in lamps and which gives a smokeless flame. These they ate.

More than forty-eight hours before their rescue, as near as the men could determine, the last of the crusts and oil were passed around in small quantities. For the last two days, however, they had been without food.

WEDS WIDOW WITH EIGHTEEN CHILDREN

But That Is Not All, for Henry Annexes Thirteen Step-Grandchildren.

CAMDEN, N. J., Oct. 4.—George Washington Henry, fifty-five, a Hurffville blacksmith, married Mrs. Henrietta Verfillee, sixty-four, a widow of Gloucester City, yesterday afternoon, and with the wedding increased the number of his near relatives by eighteen—the children of his wife. Mrs. Verfillee kept a little store in Gloucester City, and it was there that the couple met.

Not content with stepfathering all the young Verfillees, Henry will also take up the job of step-grandfathering thirteen other young people. The ceremony was performed in Gloucester City's City Hall by Mayor Anderson. Henry is thinking of starting a card index system to keep all his new relatives in order, it is said.

De Mar Pleads Guilty

Louis De Mar, who first informed District Attorney Perkins and his assistants that perjury had been committed in the trial of Gaetano Montimasno and Rocco Carnivale for the murder of Mike Giamano, to-day pleaded guilty to a perjury charge in the Court of General Sessions, and was remanded to the Tombs by Judge Crain for sentence Oct. 15. It was on testimony by De Mar and others that the charge of murder was brought against former Deputy Street Cleaning Commissioner Michael Rofrano, now a fugitive from justice.

Barge Captain Drowned.

The body of Capt. August Hanson, thirty-five years old, of the flour barge Ruyter, moored at One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street and the East River, was found this morning a short distance from the barge. The captain was last seen on Thursday and the supposition is he was boarding the barge early Friday morning when he fell overboard.

10,000 JOIN STRIKE AT BIG PLANT OF GENERAL ELECTRIC

Workers Make Demand for 8-Hour Day—Girls Lead in Street Demonstration.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Oct. 4.—Nearly all of approximately 10,000 union employees of the General Electric Company plant went on strike here to-day for an eight-hour working day. There was no violence. Other organized workers are considering striking. Of the striking men about 2,000 are machinists and the remainder electrical workers. Probably 5,000 employees of the plant are unorganized.

A mass meeting in the public square in the heart of the downtown district was held soon after the men left the works. Vice-President Keppler of the International Machinists' Union and Harvey Simmons, a Socialist Alderman, and other leaders counselled against violence of any kind. Meetings were held during the afternoon in various union halls. It was said the plant would be picketed immediately.

Led by 100 girl core-workers, the strikers paraded through the city.

Each girl held aloft a large placard on which was painted a figure eight. The strikers sang as they marched:

"Put this in your bonnet
With the eight hours on it,
And don't mind what the bosses say.
For when the fight is over
We'll all be in clover,
For we'll work eight hours a day."

The last previous strike at the plant came in November, 1913. Union workers objected to the dismissing of two employees who had been active in organization work. They were restored to their positions. The strike proceeded quietly.

3,000 STRIKE AT MERIDEN.

Silver and Cut Glass Workers Go Out When Demands Are Refused.

MERIDEN, Conn., Oct. 4.—About 3,000 silver and cut glass workers employed in the five factories here of the International Silver Company walked out today because the firm had not reconsidered its refusal to grant certain demands made by the employees.

ASKS POLICE TO FIND GIRL MISSING FOUR DAYS

Brother-in-Law Says Susan Valley Left Home Ostensibly to Go to a Theatre.

Miss Susan A. Valley, nineteen years old, who lived with her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Jones, at No. 200 West Eighty-sixth street, was reported as missing at the Fourth Branch Detective Bureau last night by Mr. Jones.

He told the police Miss Valley had left home last Thursday afternoon with the expressed intention of going to the Adelphi Theatre at Eighty-seventh Street and Broadway, but that afterwards it was recalled that in leaving the house she had carried a small handsatchel.

The girl is 5 feet 7 inches tall, and weighs 120 pounds, has gray eyes and brown hair and she wore a black velvet hat, black broadcloth suit, a red fox neck-piece and two signet rings, one with the monogram "S. A. V." and the other with the inscription "F. H. S."

MISS KELLY WILL WED DAVIS ON DAY WIFE FREES HIM

Heiress Says They Have Rented Long Island Place and Will Raise Dogs.

Mrs. Amy Fogarty Davis, wife of Al Davis, is willing and anxious that he marry Eugenia Kelly, millionaire heiress, it was learned to-day.

The interlocutory decree of divorce obtained by Mrs. Davis when she accused her husband of going with "an unknown woman" becomes effective on Nov. 6. At that time, through her lawyers, Johnston & Johnston of No. 256 Broadway, she will ask that the decree be made final.

If Mrs. Davis refused to ask that a final decree be granted it would be impossible for Al Davis to wed Eugenia Kelly. But she is going to ask that it be made final.

"I would like to see Al Davis married to another woman, for then he would have no excuse for presenting further claims against me," Mrs. Davis said to a friend to-day. "I am sick and tired of him. He has not treated me fairly and it will be a relief to get rid of him once and for all."

The friend to whom she spoke said that Al Davis wooed and won her just as he is courting Eugenia Kelly. Before her marriage she was Amy Fogarty, daughter of the late Patrick A. Fogarty, millionaire and member of the brewing firm of O'Reilly, Skelly & Fogarty. Al Davis was not of her religious faith, but he gave up his Jewish teachings and became a Roman Catholic in order to wed her.

S. S. Shiver, of the firm of Johnston & Johnston, refused to discuss the Davis case when asked about it to-day.

John F. McIntyre, who represents Mrs. Edward Kelly, the mother of Eugenia, said he had not seen her since Friday. He added that nothing would be done regarding Davis or Miss Kelly until he had conferred with Mrs. Kelly.

Eugenia Kelly said to-day she would marry Al Davis in New Jersey as soon as possible.

"I will marry Mr. Davis as soon after he gets his divorce decree as I can," said Miss Kelly to-day as she was about to drive from her mother's home in a taxicab.

"That will mean goodby to Broadway forever for us both. We have taken a house at East Williston, L. I., and that is where we are going to live. Mr. Davis has his kennels and horses now at his parents' home at Eatontown, N. J., and he will bring them to East Williston. Then we shall raise dogs and horses.

"But what about your mother's threat to start a civil action to prevent you getting your inheritance?" Miss Kelly was asked.

"Oh, don't mind mother. She's a good old soul, God bless he, and she means well."

The slander suit brought by Al Davis against Mrs. Kellly was filed with the County Clerk in the Supreme Court this afternoon. Although no amount was specified Davis said the other day that his action would be for $50,000.

Only the summons was filed by Robert H. Elder, Davis's attorney, the complaint being withheld.

AUTO BLEW UP WITH COMPANY THAT MADE IT

New Surety Co. Sues "Brass King" for $2,500 He Subscribed to Concern.

The story of how Daniel M. Brady, the "Brass King," and brother of "Diamond Jim" Brady, paid $3,800 for an "Owen" automobile and then saw it blow up after he had spent $1,000 in repairs, was retold to a jury before Supreme Court Justice Weeks to-day.

The blowing up of Mr. Brady's automobile occurred simultaneously with the explosion of the company organized to manufacture the machines. The concern was financed by Horace M. Kilborn, Vice-President of the National City Bank, and the autos were to bear the name of Mr. Kilborn's brother, Orson. One hundred men were found who subscribed $2,500 each and agreed to take a car at that price. The chattel mortgage had to be guaranteed and a bond was obtained from the National Surety Company. Attorney John J. Adams, for the "Brass King," said his client thought he had done enough for the company when he bought an extra fine car for $3,800. The National Surety Company brought suit against Mr. Brady.

PETITIONS IN HAFF CASE.

Two petitions have been sent to Washington in the case of H. Clayton Haff, former cashier of the First National Bank of Islip, L. I., who is charged with falsifying reports to the Comptroller of the Currency. One petition, said to have 500 signatures, including stockholders and depositors of the bank, asks clemency. A second, intended, it is thought, to defeat the first, asks that the trial of the ex-cashier be speeded.

The second petition emanated from the bank directors. Haff, who hopes for President Wilson's clemency, says he will plead "technically guilty" when his case is called up Oct. 6 to be set for trial.
