BIG DEAL IN DOWN-TOWN PROPERTY

McNary and Martinez Buy on Corner of Texas and Stanton.

Saturday afternoon at 5 oclock Felix Martinez and James G. McNary closed a deal for the buildings and ground on the corner of Stanton and Texas street. The purchase was made from Mrs. J. S. Steeley, formerly of El Paso, but now residing in Los Angeles. The amount paid for the property was reported to be $100,000 and both Mr. McNary and Mr. Martinez stated that the deal was made as an investment only, although it was reported on the streets Monday that the First National bank was planning to build a new bank structure on the site.

The ground is 86 by 90 feet and is now occupied by a hardware store, Pence Bros. real estate office, a racket store and a rooming house. No improvements will be made to the property at the present time.

Dry Shampoo Better Than Soap and Water

(From The New York Graphic.)

"Once in two or three months is as often as it is advisable to wash the hair with soap and water," says Claribel Montague, the beauty expert. "The rubbing, drying and rinsing, together with the action of the alkali in the soap—especially the alkali—tend to make the hair coarse, hard and brittle. Too much moisture causes the hair to become thin and lose its color.

"A simple and satisfactory dry shampoo is made by mixing four ounces of powdered orris root with four ounces of therox. Sprinkle a tablespoonful of this mixture on the head and brush thoroughly through the hair once or twice a week. That is all there is to it. This treatment not only keeps the hair light, fluffy and lustrous, but therox produces the growth of new hair."

HEALTHY BOOM IS IN PROGRESS IN EAST EL PASO

East El Paso is enjoying a healthy boom just now. J. R. Irion, who was here for the Bankers' association convention last week, and who owns block seven in the East El Paso addition, has arranged to have a modern flat building and a number of brick cottages in the block.

The block was purchased by Mr. Irion when he was here for the former Bankers' association convention and he considers his investment such a good one that he intends to improve it. In addition to this work a number of new cottages are being built in the east side addition.

Joe Dunne is building two brick houses on Alameda avenue, each to cost $2000. Joe Naghone is building a store and apartment house on the corner of Alameda and Hanmett avenues which will cost $2000. Charles McGinnis is also building a four room brick cottage on Fruita street.

KINKEL TO BUILD A HOME ON HIS RANCH

Charles A. Kinkel is planning to build a six room ranch house on his upper valley ranch near Anthony, N. M. Mr. Kinkel has 80 acres of valley land in the lower Mesilla valley and is an amateur rancher, practicing law in town and living in the country.

TO SIGN UP FOR MILLS SKY SCRAPER

H. L. Stevens, head of the firm of H. L. Stevens & company ,which has the contract for the Anson Mills building, is here from his headquarters in Houston to sign the contract for the 12 story building and to arrange the details for beginning active construction work on the plaza skyscraper.

ASPHALT PAVEMENT ON THE NEW ANTHONY ROAD

Asphalt paving is now being laid on the Anthony road from the cement plant to the Texas-New Mexico state line. The Cables construction outfit is now putting down the hot stuff on the road, which has been graveled and graded by the construction crews.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS.

Howard Jeffries, banker's son, under the evil influence of Robert Underwood, fellow-student at Yale, leads a life of dissipation, marries the daughter of a gambler who died in prison, and is disowned by his father. Forced to leave college, he tried to get work and fails. His wife, Annie, is straight as a die, and has a heart of gold. A former college chum makes a business proposition to Howard which requires $2,000 cash, and Howard is broke. Robert Underwood, who made love to Annie in his college days and was repulsed, and was once engaged to Howard's stepmother, Alicia, is a welcome visitor at the Jeffries home. Underwood has apartments in the Astruria, an exclusive apartment house. Howard recalls a $250 loan to Underwood that remains unpaid and decides to ask him for the $2,000 he needs. Mrs. Jeffries, Sr., prepares for a great reception at her home. Mrs. Jeffries, sr., foolishly encourages a dangerous intimacy with Underwood which the latter takes advantage of until he becomes a sort of social highwayman. Discovering his true character, Mrs. Jeffries, sr., denies him the house, but receives a note from Underwood threatening suicide unless she revokes her sentence of banishment. She decides to go and see him. Underwood is in desperate financial straits. Merchants for whom he has acted as commissioner in the sale of art treasures demand an accounting. Underwood cannot make good. Howard Jeffries calls at Underwood's apartments in an intoxicated condition to borrow money. He asks Underwood for $2000 and is told the latter is in debt up to his eyes. Howard drinks himself into a maudling condition. Mrs. Jeffries, sr., arrives as Howard sleeps on a sofa. She demands from Underwood a promise that he will not take his life, pointing to the disgrace that would attach to herself from being associated with a suicide. Underwood refuses to promise unless she will renew her patronage. This she refuses to do, and takes her leave. Underwood turns out the lights, places a pistol at his temple, and fires. The report of the pistol awakens Howard from his drunken slumber. He stumbles over the dead body of Underwood. Realizing his serious predicament he starts to leave the room and is met by Underwood's valet. The latter discovers the body, raises an alarm and Howard is turned over to the police. Captain Clinton notorious for his brutal treatment of prisoners begins putting Howard through an ordeal known in police parlance as the third degree. After being compelled to stand in one position for five hours while the bulying captain hurled questions at him, Howard is practically hypnotized when the shining revolver is flashed in his eyes, and mechanically repeats after the captain what purports to be a confession of murder. His wife, Abbie, arrives on the scene.

CHAPTER XI.

Unable to control herself any longer, Annie broke down completely and burst into tears. When the door opened and she saw her husband led away, pale and trembling, between those two burly policemen, it was as if all she cared for on earth had gone out of her life forever. Capt. Clinton laid his hand gently on her shoulder. With more sympathy in his face than was his custom to display, he said:

"Now, little woman—'tain't no kind of use carrying on like that! If you want to help your husband and get him out of his trouble you want to get busy. Sitting there crying your eyes out won't do him any good."

Annie threw up her head. Her eyes were red, but they were dry now. Her face was set and determined. The captain was right. Only foolish women weep and wail when misfortune knocks at their door. The right sort of women go bravely out and make a fight for liberty and honor. Howard was innocent. She was convinced of that, no matter how black things looked against him. She would not leave a stone unturned till she had regained for him his liberty. With renewed hope in her heart and resolution in her face, she turned to confront the captain.

"What has he done?" she demanded.

"Killed his friend, Robert Underwood."

He watched her face closely to see what effect his words would have on her.

"Robert Underwood dead!" exclaimed Annie with more surprise than emotion.

"Yes," said the captain sternly, "and your husband, Howard Jeffries, killed him."

"That's not true! I'd never believe that," said Annie promptly.

"He's made a full confession," went on the captain.

"A confession!" she echoed uneasily. "What do you mean?"

"Just what I say. Your husband has made a full confession in the presence of witnesses, that he came here to Underwood's rooms to ask for money. They quarreled. Your husband drew a pistol and shot him. He has signed a confession which will be presented to the magistrate this morning."

Annie looked staggered for a moment, but her faith in her husband was unshakeable. Almost hysterically she cried:

"I don't believe it. I don't believe it. You may have tortured him into signing something. Everybody knows your methods, Capt. Clinton. But thank God there is a law in the United States which protects the innocent as well as punishes the guilty. I shall get the most able lawyers to defend him even if I have to sell myself into slavery for the rest of my life."

"Bravo, little woman!" said the captain mockingly. "That's the way to talk. I like your spunk, but before you go I'd like to ask you a few questions. Sit down."

He waved her to a chair and he sat opposite her.

"Now, Mrs. Jeffries," he began encouragingly, "tell me—did you ever hear your husband threaten Howard Underwood?"

By this time Annie had recovered her self-possession. She knew that the best way to help Howard was to keep cool and to say nothing which was likely to injure his cause. Boldly, therefore, she answered:

"You've no right to ask me that question."

The captain shifted uneasily in his seat. He knew she was within her legal right. He couldn't bully her into saying anything that would incriminate her husband.

"I merely thought you would like to assist the authorities, to—" he stammered awkwardly.

"To convict my husband," she said calmly. "Thank you, I understand my position."

"You can't do him very much harm, you know," said the captain with affected jocularity. "He has confessed to the shooting."

"I don't believe it," she said emphatically.

Trying a different tack, he asked carelessly:

"Did you know Mr. Underwood?"

She hesitated before replying, then indifferently she said:

"Yes, I knew him at one time. He introduced me to my husband."

"Where was that?"

"In New Haven, Conn."

"Up at the college, eh? How long have you known Mr. Underwood?"

Annie looked at her inquisitor and said nothing. She wondered what he was driving at, what importance the question had to the case. Finally she said:

"I met him once or twice up at New Haven, but I've never seen him since my marriage to Mr. Jeffries. My husband and he were not very good friends. That is—"

She stopped, realizing that she had made a mistake. How foolish she had been! The police, of course, were anxious to show that there was ill feeling between the two men. Her heart misgave her as she saw the look of satisfaction in the captain's face.

"Ah!" he exclaimed. "Not very good friends, eh? In fact, your husband didn't like him, did he?"

"He didn't like him well enough to run after him," she replied hesitatingly.

The captain now started off in another direction.

"Was your husband ever jealous of Underwood?"

By this time Annie had grown suspicious of every question. She was on her guard.

"Jealous? What do you mean? No, he was not jealous. There was never any reason. I refuse to answer any more questions."

The captain rose and began to pace the floor.

"There's one little thing more, Mrs. Jeffries, and then you can go. You can help your husband by helping us. I want to put one more question to you and be careful to answer truthfully. Did you call at these rooms last night to see Mr. Underwood?"

"I!" exclaimed Annie with mingled astonishment and indignation. "Of course not."

"Sure?" demanded the captain, eyeing her narrowly.

"Positive," said Annie firmly.

The captain looked puzzled.

"A woman called here last night to see him," he said thoughtfully, "and I thought that perhaps—"

Interrupting himself, he went quickly to the door of the apartment and called to some one who was waiting in the corridor outside. A boy about 18 years of age, in the livery of an elevator attendant, entered the room. The captain pointed to Annie.

"Is that the lady?"

The boy looked carefully, and then shook his head.

"Don't think so—no, sir. The other lady was a great swell."

"You're sure, eh?" said the captain.

"I think so," answered the boy.

"Do you remember the name she gave?"

"No, sir," replied the boy. "Ever since you asked me—"

Annie arose and moved toward the door. She had no time to waste there. Every moment now was precious. She must get legal assistance at once. Turning to Capt. Clinton, she said:

"If you've no further use for me, captain, I think I'll go."

"Just one moment, Mrs. Jeffries," he said.

The face of the elevator boy suddenly brightened up.

"That's it," he said eagerly. "That's it—Jeffries. I think that was the name she gave, sir."

"Who?" demanded the captain.

"Not this lady," said the boy. "The other lady. I think she said Jeffries, or Jenkins, or something like that."

The captain waved his hand toward the door.

"That's all right—go. We'll find her all right."

The boy went out and the captain turned round to Annie.

"It'll be rather a pity if it isn't you," he said, with a suggestive smile.

"How so?" she demanded.

The captain laughed.

"Well, you see, a woman always gets the jury mixed up. Nothing fools a man like a pretty face, and 12 times 1 is 12. You see if they quarreled about you—your husband would stand some chance." Patronizingly he added, "Come, Mrs. Jeffries, you'd better tell the truth and I can advise you who to go to."

Annie drew herself up, and with dignity said:

"Thanks, I'm going to the best lawyer I can get. Not one of those courtroom politicians recommended by a police captain. I am going to Richard Brewster. He's the man. He'll soon get my husband out of the Tombs." Reflectively she added: "If my father had had Judge Brewster to defend him instead of a legal shark, he'd never have been railroaded to jail. He'd be alive to-day."

Capt. Clinton guffawed loudly. The idea of ex-Judge Brewster taking the case seemed to amuse him hugely.

"Brewster?" he laughed boisterously. "You'd never be able to get Brewster. Firstly, he's too expensive. Secondly, he's old man Jeffries' lawyer. He wouldn't touch your case with a ten-foot pole. Besides," he added in a tone of contempt. "Brewster's no good in a case of this kind. He's a constitution lawyer—one of them international fellers. He don't know nothing—"

"He's the only lawyer I want," she retorted determinedly. Then she went on: "Howard's folks must come to his rescue. They must stand by him—they must—"

The captain grinned.

"From what I hear," he said, "old man Jeffries won't raise a finger to save his scapegrace son from going to the chair. He's done with him for good and all."

Chuckling aloud and talking to himself rather than to his vis-a-vis, he muttered:

"That alone will convince the jury. They'll argue that the boy can't be much good if his own go back on him."

Annie's eye flashed.

"Precisely!" she exclaimed. "But his own won't go back on him. I'll see to it that they don't." Rising and turning toward the door, she asked: "Have you anything more to say to me, captain?"

"No," replied the captain hesitatingly. "You can go. Of course you'll be called later for the trial. You can see your husband in the Tombs when you wish."

No man is so hard that he has not a soft spot somewhere. At heart Capt. Clinton was not an unkind man. Long service in the police force and a mistaken notion of the proper method of procedure in treating his prisoners had hardened him and made him brutal. Secretly he felt sorry for this plucky, energetic little woman who had such unbounded faith in her good-for-nothing husband, and was ready to fight all alone in his defense. Eyeing her with renewed interest, he demanded:

"What are you going to do now?"

Annie reached the door, and drawing herself up to her full height, turned and said:

"I'm going to undo all you have done, Capt. Clinton. I'm going to free my husband and prove his innocence before the whole world. I don't know how I'm going to do it, but I'll do it. I'll fight you, captain, to the last ditch, and I'll rescue my poor husband from your clutches if it takes everything I possess in the world."

Quickly she opened the door and disappeared.

PARKER REFUSES INJUNCTION ORDER

Railroad Company May Not Condemn A. & M. College Grounds.

Las Cruces, N. M., May 16.—In the case of the Texas, New Mexico & Pacific Railroad company vs. the regents of the Agricultural college, judge Parker denied the petition of the plaintiff for the appointment of a commission to appraise the lands of the college, through which the company desired to construct a railroad. The court took the ground that while the legal property was vested in the regents, it was nevertheless territorial land and that such land could not be condemned by a railroad company for a right of way.

WORK OF INSTALING SEWER SYSTEM FOR CIUDAD JUAREZ COMMENCES

Work of constructing a sewerage system for Ciudad Juarez was begun Monday morning by representatives of the F. E. Lister & company of the City of Mexico. Some 14,000 meters of pipe will be laid.

It has been found necessary to instal a pumping plant in order to raise the sewerage to river level. This will be located on the eastern limits of the city. Excavation work for the pump house has begun, but the street digging will not be in progress until Wednesday or later.

It is estimated by jefe politico Portillo that the system will cost about $110,000, Mexican standard. This sum will be paid through the customs percentage received by the municipality. The 1 1-4 percent will be increased to 2 percent until the full amount is paid.

The sewers will be laid in a system covering the principal residence streets of the city. Paving of the streets will follow, but as yet no contracts have been let for that work.

Attorney Guillermo Porras, secretary to the governor of Chihuahua, is in Juarez. His visit is one of inspection both of the sewerage work and the Juarez monument under construction. He will return Tuesday.
