After tennis or when motoring there is nothing so refreshing as a cold, delicious

Drink of VIRGINIA DARE WINE

Served plain, it is like proverbial Ambrosia. Mixed as a Cocktail or Highball, it makes the most thirst-satisfying drink that ever soothed a parched palate.

HETTY GREEN RESTS BESIDE HUSBAND IN RURAL CEMETERY

Neighbors Are Pallbearers for Richest Woman at Funeral in Bellows Falls, Vt.

MAY READ WILL TO-DAY.

Fortune Now Estimated at $150,000,000, and There Are Hints of a "Surprise."

BELLOWS FALLS, Vt., July 5.—Mrs. Hetty Green, long regarded as the wealthiest woman in America, was buried here to-day in the family plot adjoining Immanuel Episcopal Church. The grave was made beside that of Mrs. Green's husband, Edward H. Green. A plain granite shaft, inscribed only with the family name, marks the spot.

The funeral service was held at Immanuel Church at noon, and was attended by 200 persons, most of whom had known Mrs. Green as a resident of the village. The rector of Immanuel, Rev. Alfred C. Wilson, read the service. Two hymns were sung, "I Heard the Mount of Voices" and "There Is a Blessed Home."

At the grave there was belief and simple ceremony in keeping with the tastes and known wishes of Mrs. Green. Floral pieces in great number were received at the church. The cards attached showed that they had come from personal friends and business associates from many parts of the country.

The body was brought here on a train arriving late in the forenoon, an hour behind its schedule. It was accompanied by Mrs. Green's son, Col. E. H. R. Green; her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Wilks, and Mrs. Herbert H. Bancroft, a lifelong friend. The casket, covered with broadcloth, was severely plain. A mantle of white carnations rested upon it.

The pallbearers, all of whom were from the village, were old friends of Mrs. Green's. The casket was borne by Dr. O. M. George, Charles E. Capron, A. I. Bullen, W. J. Conant, E. L. Walker, F. G. Flint and George A. Weston. The honorary pallbearers were Charles P. Allen, Charles W. Butterfield, Preston H. Hadley, State Senator Frederick H. Babbitt, A. H. Chandler and G. P. Wales.

It was understood that the will of Mrs. Green would be read at the Green home later in the day and offered for probate here to-day or to-morrow.

Col. Green is authority for the statement that his mother's will probably will be probated without loss of time. He refused to express any opinion in regard to the contents, but it is intimated it may contain surprises.

One friend of the family thought it might be found Mrs. Green had used some of her fortune to make an endowment similar to the Sage Foundation, about which she had frequently made inquiries.

A person who was very close to Mrs. Green in her financial operations and who spoke, he said, with authority, made two statements to-day in regard to Mrs. Green's fortune.

First—the property accumulated by her may amount to $150,000,000, and is not likely to be more than $200,000,000.

Second—With her life-long hatred of tax gatherers, the "richest woman in the world" did all, in the last six years, that her ingenuity could devise, to put the bulk of her fortune beyond the reach of the inheritance tax appraisers of this and other states.

Ever since she summoned her only son, Col. E. H. R. Green from Texas, in 1910, Mrs. Green had been striving, according to those in her confidence, to arrange her investments in such a way as to minimize the State bills to be gathered at her death.

An estimate of her wealth, classified as to the character of the investment, was made to-day as follows by one of her advisers:

New York City real estate mortgages, $30,000,000 to $45,000,000.

Industrial and mining securities, $40,000,000 to $60,000,000.

Railroad and bank stocks and bonds, $15,000,000 to $25,000,000.

Farming and other tracts, oil properties and realty in the Southwest, $10,000,000.

Real estate in New York, Boston, Chicago and St. Louis, $10,000,000.

Neither Mrs. Green nor her son, it is said, had ever made a complete inventory of the properties on account of their variety and constantly changing market values.

Unknown to the public or to the average trader in Wall Street, Mrs. Green had become heavily interested in the last few years in Pullman Palace Car, Zinc And Standard Oil securities.

It will be found, according to those closest to her, that she had comparatively few "cats and dogs," or worthless securities.

In the last few years she had become almost fascinated, her business associates say, by the realty bond and mortgage market, and she put practically all her surplus capital into mortgages, chiefly in Manhattan. She has loaned in sums of about $500,000 on scores of fine modern buildings in Fifth Avenue and Broadway, from Twenty-third to Fifty-ninth Streets.

Much of this money has been put out in names other than her own. Her son holds some of these mortgages and the Westminster Company holds others, it is said. This company was organized recently to handle some of Mrs. Green's investments.

One of the big industrial securities Mrs. Green seldom, if ever, dealt in was United States Steel Corporation stock. Several years ago Andrew Carnegie advised the public against speculating in steel common, and she took his advice seriously.

She came into possession, in the '90's, of the G. W. Gage tract in Chicago, on which she had foreclosed a loan of $100,000. Soon afterward the property was valued at $1,000,000, and it has been rising ever since. She owned in 1911 more than twenty pieces of property in St. Louis.

As long ago as 1899 she began transferring property to her son. It was said in that year she feared the passage of a federal income tax bill.

Of the New York corporations in which Mrs. Green put her money and caused her son to be made a director are the Columbia Trust Company, the Produce Exchange Safe Deposit and Storage Company and the Seaboard National Bank. Col. Green is also on the boards of the American Exchange National Bank of Dallas, Tex., the American National Bank of Terrell, Tex., the Dallas & Sage Company, the Murray Company and the Terrell Company. The Murray Company owns cotton baling and ginning patents, and has returned 10 per cent. or more on Mrs. Green's investment. She owned almost absolutely the Texas Midland Railroad, which has 111 miles of track and absorbed a branch of the Texas Central Railroad.

MURDERED OVER A QUARTER.

Pullman Porter Slain in Gambling Quarrel.

Hugh Miller, a negro Pullman porter, whose home was in West Thirty-second Street, New York, was murdered in Newark this morning. The police are searching for Edward Jackson, another negro.

They say the two men were gambling when a dispute started over a quarter. Jackson drew a razor and attacked Miller. With the blood gushing from his wounds, Miller ran two blocks, but died in a few minutes. Jackson escaped.
