THE DANGEROUS HOUSE FLY.

The city department of public health gives a timely and needed warning to those leaving the city for their vacations to avoid places where there are many flies. Those who follow this advice will avoid places which are uncleanly, which allow food and garbage to be so exposed as to attract and feed the flies, says the Philiadelphia Press. They will avoid places where stables and dwellings are in near vicinity, as the exposed manure is the choice breeding place of thousands and even millions of flies. In other words, to avoid disease-conveying flies avoid places where they permit flies to breed and feed. Formerly the conditions which multiply flies and the flies themselves were considered objectionable but endurable. Now the patient toleration of flies is known to be a heedless trifling with the health and life of human beings. Disease germs are for the most part innocuous to man, until through some convenient medium they are conveyed to his system. This purveyor of disease is the fly. His guilt has been proved to a demonstration. His capacity for carrying on his feet from foul and putrescent sources the bacteria of disease has been recorded by gelatin plates on which he has been made to alight and have proven his guilt.

The raisin growers of Fresno county, California, are trying to promote the consumption of raisins by establishing "raisin day," on which all patriots who believe in patronizing home enterprise and consuming home productions are expected to indulge in raisin cakes and puddings, raisin bread, etc. The boys and girls will fall in line for this, and as they are the best consumers of things sweet, it would seem to be good policy to awaken the enthusiasm of young eaters. Parents are now busy striving to get enough of things more staple than raisins, which would be adopted generally if they could be made to take the place of meat, eggs and other products. Moreover, it is suspected that if all were to do as the raisin growers desire there would be a boom in the price as a result of the boom in the demand.

Smokers who are going to France should know that, now the French duties on tobacco and cigars have been increased, travelers entering France are allowed to bring into the country free of duty only ten cigars, 20 cigarettes, or 1¾ ounces of tobacco, and this must be on their person, or in their hand luggage examined at the frontier. The customs officials are fully entitled to confiscate or tax any quantity of tobacco or cigars however small which may be found in the heavy luggage of passengers sent under seal to a terminal station (St. Lazare or Gare du Nord) and examined there, and just now they are very strict.

The British commercial attache at Yokohama reports that there has been a sudden development at Tokyo and Yokohama in the use of solid rubber tires for jinrikishas, and the adoption of the new tire promises to become general in Japan. The utilization of rubber and its products for every conceivable purpose is so rapidly swelling the demand that there will have to be a corresponding augmentation of the annual crop or prices will bound to prohibitory heights. The world will shower wealth on the inventor who produces an artificial rubber that will give service approaching that of the genuine article.

Misfortune seems to follow the Zeppelin concern. Hard upon the recent disasters to several of the flying machines come the explosions in the works at Friedrichshafen, resulting in serious damage to property and the death of one man and the injury of a number of others. Still, German determination is of the holdfast order, and it is quite likely that there will be persistent effort toward perfecting the Zeppelin principle to the point where present perils will be minimized.

A man and his wife are demanding $150,000 because they were ejected from a New York hotel. People who have so often been told when applying for accommodations at New York hotels that there were no rooms left will extend sympathy to the ejected pair.

The city of Cleveland has just celebrated its one hundred and fourteenth birthday. People who remember when there wasn't anything but a schoolhouse and a grocery store there are becoming scarce.

A movement is on foot at Atlantic City to prohibit people from maintaining poultry yards inside the city limits. We have always been inclined to believe that cities were not intended for the purpose of stock raising.

A woman recognized an old, long missing sweetheart by his voice as he called out the names of stations in the Hudson tube. Fear of such things probably accounts for most conductors apparently disguising their natural voices.

The New York Herald wants to know the name of the man who invented the cocktail. Why not let him enjoy his obscurity if he is trying to live it down?

BLAME MAYOR FOR NEWARK LYNCHING

FIFTY-EIGHT INDICTED FOLLOWING INQUIRY INTO DEATH OF ETHERINGTON.

3 OFFICIALS ARE SCORED

Grand Jury Says Authorities Made No Effort to Stop Hanging July 8—Mayor and Police Chief Deserted Posts, Is Charged.

Newark, Ohio.—One of the bitterest excoriations of public officials ever uttered in the Ohio courts was embraced in the report of the special grand jury, directed by the state's attorney general's department on the lynching of Carl M. Etherington, an Anti-saloon league detective, July 8 last. The report carried with it 58 indictments, of which 25 were for first-degree murder, 21 for rioting, 10 for assault and battery and 10 for perjury.

Former Sheriff Wm. Linke of Licking county; former Mayor Herbert Atherton of Newark and former Chief of Police Robert Zergabel are held to blame for the lynching. They could have prevented it, in the opinion of the grand jury, had they lived up to their official duty. The sheriff is said to have cowardly deserted his post, the mayor to have gone to bed at home and the chief to have gone to a near-by saloon to play cards.

Responsibility is also lodged with the people, for the report says had they elected competent officials, the lynching would not have taken place.

The miners' officials and operators were brought together, it was learned, by J. E. Williams, proprietor of the Streator opera house, who has interested himself in the strike and studied methods of bringing about peace in industrial conflicts.

Mrs. Lamphere's jealousy is said to have been the cause of the tragedy.

Two years ago Brown, a brilliant student, the holder of a medal for bravery given him by the English government for services during the Boer war, startled his congregation by announcing he had gambled away $300 of the church funds.

He replaced the money was forgiven and on the Sunday following the episode preached a vigorous sermon on gambling, citing his own case as an example of the danger of the evil.
