How England Regards the Sunday Newspaper.

The editors of the London Sunday newspapers and gillots in Lower Fleet street should are unanimous and all the people of the Continental Sunday, the destruction of the Saturday half-holiday, and the immigration of the Sunday yellow press are dreaded by working-men and wage-earners far too sincerely to give a sunday journalism any chance of success. It is understood that the public expressed its opinion by refusing to purchase the publications issued by the publishers and proprietors of the two offending sunday journals, that the loss was enormous, and that the recognition of facts by Mr. Harmsworth and Sir Edward Lawson was emphasized by their pecuniary interests. Both gentlemen have accepted frankly and worthily the protests on moral, religious, and economical grounds. Sunday journalism may pay in the states. In this country, fortunately, public remonstrances are reflected in newspaper balance sheets. Arnold White, in Harper's Weekly.
