Jealously Guarded Secret of Making Eau de Cologne

Cologne's toilet water industry was established at the beginning of the seventeenth century. At that time the city numbered about 50,000 inhabitants, while the present population is 450,000. The inventors of eau de Cologne were Paul Femins and Maria Clementine, Catholic nun. They began on a small scale with few persons employed, whom they did not initiate into their secret of the whole process, the last and most important mixture being made by the inventors themselves. Paul Femins left the secret with the Farina family, while the nun bequeathed the secret to one Peter Schaeben, who had been her assistant for many years.

NEW FOOD PROGRAM FOR EATING PLACES IS NOW IN EFFECT

A new program for all public eating places, effective Oct. 21, has been announced by the Missouri Division of the Food Administration. The new rules apply to all places where cooked food is sold to be eaten on the premises, and affect 9,000,000 regular or occasional patrons.

The general plan of the Food Administration with regard to the conduct of public eating places has been reduced to 12 "general orders." These orders prohibit the serving of any bread that does not contain at least the 20 per cent of wheat flour substitutes; of this Victory bread no more than two ounces may be served to a patron at one meal. And no bread is to be served until after the first course is on the table and no bread or toast may be served as a garniture.

Bacon also is barred as a garniture and only one meat may be served to a patron at a meal. Included in the definition of meat are beef, mutton, pork and poultry. Not more than one-half ounce of butter is to be served to one person at a meal, and Cheddar (American) cheese is limited to the same amount. "Double" cream is banned.

No sugar bowls will be on the tables. A teaspoonful is the limit for a meal, and then only when asked for. Two pounds is the allowance to be observed for each 90 meals served, including cooking.

No waste food may be buried, but all must be saved to feed animals or reduced to obtain fats.

Attention is specially directed toward the conservation of bread and butter, cereals, meats, fats, sugar, coffee, cheese and ice, to fresh vegetables and fruits which should be served when possible, and to unnecessary suppers, teas, luncheons and banquets, which are condemned as "fourth" meals. The Food Administration desires as few fried dishes as possible.

Simplified service, with meats and vegetables on one plate instead of in side dishes, and only necessary silverware, and simplification of the menu and the menu cards are urged as means of saving not only food but labor and paper. The war program discourages the table d'hote meal, except when confined to few courses and small variety, as on the Continent. American-plan hotels should require guests to write orders, and all menus should be in plain English actually describing the food.

120,000,000 MUST BE FED

Industry is falling into two classes—essentials and less essentials. And by essentials we mean essential to the prosecution of the war.

There are also the vitally essential foods and the less essential. Staples—meat, wheat, sugar and fats—are essential. Fresh vegetables, perishables of many kinds, bulky, unshipable foods are, in a military sense, the less essential.

The second year of this country's participation in the war brings a broader plan for food conservation. Not so much emphasis on this particular item and that, but a steady pressure in all directions. The most careful and thrifty conservation, the elimination of every type of waste—these are the principles which the Missouri Division of the Food Administration is asking to be observed, the standard which must be lived up to.

The United States cannot ship 17,000,000 tons of food to the Allies unless strict conservation is continued. We cannot increase our last year's food exports to the Allies by 50 per cent and not continue to cut down our own consumption.

The need is great. To supply the essential foods to the 120,000,000 people in Europe now arrayed against Germany is the present task.

And it must be fulfilled.
