GREEN OLIVE PEPPER CORN

Corn sautéd with green peppers and olives is a delicious dish that may be prepared in a few minutes. Once tried it will be repeated frequently each year when corn on the cob is obtainable. Here is an excellent recipe:

Ingredients: Six ears sweet corn (uncooked); one-fourth teaspoon salt; one-eighth teaspoon paprika, one green sweet pepper; one cup chopped Spanish green olives; two tablespoonfuls butter.

Cut corn from cob. Remove seeds and white fibre from the sweet pepper. Cut the pepper into fine strips and cook five minutes in the butter. Add the corn and cook for ten to fifteen minutes, stirring to prevent burning. Add the salt, paprika and green olives. Serve.

large, as well as a motley one. The selection of the presents had given Junior a sudden and new interest and pleasure at the big store, for the choosing of gifts for others was a novelty to him, and anticipation of their happy expression had filled his mind with gladness. It was with a real [illegible] and a hearty handshake that he bade his guests.

At first the company was rather overwhelmed by the splendors of the Wilson home, the rich furnishings and the big Santa made such commanding [illegible] and girls felt out of place and uncomfortable. But after the unwrapping of the cobweb, the secrets of which led each one to a hidden gift, and when the games had made them powerful of themselves, the fun of it all got into their feet and made them dance, the delight of it all made them sing, and they gathered about the big Christmas tree that beamed and twinkled in a corner of the parlor with an eager expectancy that made Junior a very happy Santa Claus, as he distributed his favors. Then, when the table had been cleared of its dainty refreshments, the leader said that they wanted to give some indoor tableaux for their hosts before they went.

So he called first for Madame Melba, and a little girl responded with all the aplomb of a prima donna. Then Signor Caruso assumed a kingly attitude and looked upon the assembly with as much as he could assume of dignity. He was followed by Sir Harry Lauder, who added to his posture a verse of "It's Nice to Get Up in the Morning." This seemed to suggest the idea of going to bed first and there was whispering about returning home but one of the guests said they must have a song from Santa Claus before they went. This rather alarmed Junior at first, but he rose to it with a line or two from "Old King Cole Was a Merry Old Soul," which satisfied the demand. Then they all joined hands in a ring and sang the Christmas carol, "Away in a Manger," and so ended the Wilson party.

As the happy shouts lingered on the Christmas wind the Wilson family presented a tableau themselves. Mr Wilson, stood by the window, looking after the departing children. Junior seemed arrested in the act of giving away the joy of the Christmas tree, while his mother paused by the table that gleamed with silver, seeming to feel again a forgotten gladness. The party left such an impress upon the Wilsons' hearts that they have never since tried to have a Christmas to themselves.

and their enjoyment of their small portion of fortune's favors was great as than all the fun that John Wilson and his son together could get out of life.

The entertainment did bring one new thing into the rich monotony of the Wilson household, however—that of giving a Christmas party to some who would appreciate it and of thus obtaining a new experience for themselves.

The tableau performers were the first to receive invitations, and they were authorized to each invite five of their friends, so that the company that gathered at the Wilson party was

ARE JUST "PA" AND "MA" NO

Modern Child [illegible] Dignified Title [illegible] Their [illegible] Declare [illegible] London Writer.

When I was a small boy, forty years ago, children almost without exception addressed their parents as "papa" and "mamma." When a boy [illegible] went to school he frequently took to saying "sir" to his father, though, behind his back, he usually referred to him as "pater" or "the governor."

At the same time he gave up saying "mamma," which he considered childish, and took to calling his mother "mother," or sometimes "mater."

It was about twenty years ago that the abbreviations "pa" and "ma" began to be generally used. They came from America, where they had already been in use for many years.

Some children used "daddy" instead of "papa," and after a time "pater" went out altogether, and was replaced by "dad" with those older [illegible] with.

Today "dad" is almost universal. Even the little shaver of four or five calls his father "dad." As for "mamma," it is as obsolete as "papa," and mater familias is now known universally as "mum."

The only part of the kingdom in which these abbreviations have not found favor is Scotland, where the more formal "father" and "mother" are still insisted upon.—London Answers.

TO BE MODELED IN BRONZE

Winners of British Dog Racing Contests Will Have Memories Preserved by American Sculptor.

Captain Cuttle, winner of the Derby; Music Hall, winner of the Grand National, and Guards' Brigade, winner of the Waterloo, are among the 25 British champion dogs to be modeled in bronze by the American sculptor, Herbert Haseltine. The King's Labrador retriever, a champion of his class and declared at one show to be the best dog of the year, has already been modeled.

Haseltine is an inspired sculptor of the horse, says an art critic. Besides achieving a perfection of detail that delights the most fastidious owner, he has the gift of imparting the animal's character to his studies. Horses talk with their ears, and in each of Mr. Haseltine's models the set of the ears best contains to his subject is carefully reproduced.

That other animals can and do inspire him he has made in bas-relief sculpture. One study of his shows a proud, powerful lion with night in every line.

Historical Error.

The new stamp for Christopher and Nevis, two Leeward isles in the West Indies discovered by Christopher Columbus in 1493 and now British possessions, shows the discoverer looking through a pair of spectacles, remarks the London Daily Mail.

The "Bulletin" of the French Astronomical society expresses indignation at this. It shows this latest example of the general ignorance of matters astronomical, for, of course, Christopher Columbus died more than a century before Zacharias Hoonsen, maker of spectacles, made some poor man's fortune by devising the telescope.

His children, playing with some of his lenses, had found that when two lenses were placed at a certain distance apart the weathercock atop on the top of the neighboring church steeple could be seen through them as distinctly as if it had been brought nearer.

Copper and Calcium.

It is reported that Professor Hartley of Dublin has photographed, in ordinary air, spectroscopic lines due, among other things, to copper and calcium. It is believed that they arise from fine dust consisting of these substances, projected into the atmosphere by road vehicles and by smoke and the sparks of trolley wires. It is from the latter that copper is supposed to come. The quantity of copper thus found is excessively slight. Indeed, it is only the delicacy of the tests that renders it appreciable. Lines due to lead, carbon, iron, manganese, nickel and magnesium have also been detected, but the quantity of these substances is even less than that of the calcium and copper, the lines of which are always prominent in the spectra.

Rare Edition of Bible.

The only known copy of the first Protestant Bible printed in Latin has recently come into the possession of the public library at Cambridge, Mass., says Popular Mechanics Magazine. It is valued at $10,000 by the library authorities, which seems reasonable in view of some book transactions. The printing of this edition was done in 1527 at Cologne by Peter Quentel, who shortly before had printed an edition of the New Testament for Tindale. Deviled Spanish Green Olives

Here's a little hors d' oeuvre that may be prepared in a few minutes. It's novel and tasty. The family will enjoy it, and so will the guests. It's one of those "surprise" appetizers that labels your dinner "unique and charming!"

Pit large green olives and fill with the yolk of hard-boiled eggs mixed to a paste with a little butter. Lay an olive on a strip of bacon, sprinkle with paprika and a tiny pinch of mustard, roll up, fasten with toothpick and broil just long enough to crisp the bacon. Serve on toast fingers.

Queer Feelings

"Some time ago, I was very irregular," writes Mrs. Cora Rohle, of Pikeville, Ky. "I suffered a great deal, and knew I must do something for the condition. I suffered much with my back and a weakness in my limbs. I would have dreadful headaches. I had hot flashes and very queer feelings, and oh how my head hurt! I read of and of others, who seemed to have the same troubles I had, being benefited, so I began to use it. I found it most beneficial. I took several bottles . . . . and was made so much better I didn't have any more trouble of this kind. It regulated me."

Cardui has been found very helpful in the correction of many cases of painful female disorders, such as Mrs. Rohle mentions above. If you suffer as she did, try Cardui—a purely vegetable, medicinal tonic, in use for more than 40 years. It should help you.
