A Haymarket Square Wanted.

The St. Paul haymarket has been gradually creeping up Cedar street from Fourth and Fifth until it has now reached and occupied that street between Seventh and Exchange streets, as also Eighth street from Central fire hall to Wabashaw street. After a day's marketing these streets are scattered with a large quantity of loose hay and straw and other debris, presenting a very filthy and and unpleasing appearance, with no one to clean up the litter. This marketing of hay and straw on the most frequented streets in the city has got to be a crying nuisance to property owners and public travel thereon and it would seem to be high time for the city council to purchase some plat of ground and compel the hay dealers to occupy it for sales and thus get rid of this unsightly street blockading and litter.

Dakota's New Orleans Exhibit.

Sheriff Alex. McKenzie, of Bismarck, Dak., is a guest at the Merchants hotel, being present in the city as the commissioner of that territory for the New Orleans exposition exhibit thereof, to see the six cars from Sioux City, containing the southern exhibit arrive and join a train of seven cars from northern Dakota, while thirteen cars left St. Paul on the river road for Chicago en route for New Orleans last evening. Melvin Grigsbee, of Sioux City, assistant commissioner for Dakota, leaves Chicago this morning to prepare for the reception of the train there, and Commissioner McKenzie will follow it in a day or two with Mayor Fleming, of Fargo; John T. Wallace, of Burleigh county; W. H. Leverett, of Pleasant Bend, and J. A. Fields, of Kidder county, as his corps of assistants.

The space allotted to Dakota at the exposition is 55 by 200 feet. Its exhibit is to be in two sections, the first of which will be of its aboriginal peoples and how they lived and subsisted when the settlers came in upon them. For this purpose a number of Indians will be taken there with their skin lodges, utensils for cooking, hunting implements, wolf dogs, and harness by which they were hitched to carts and sledges, of which original specimens will be shown, their native clothing and costumes, the grasses on which their herbaceous game subsisted, as also this game taxidermized, as well as the fish and birds which they hunted and fed upon.

The second section of the exhibit will be almost entirely of an agricultural character, and will consist of wheat, oats, barley, rye, corn, grasses, roots, vegetables, fruits, and in fact, everything that the soil produces as a result of the agricultural industry of this newly settled territory. From the description given by Commissioner McKenzie this agricultural exhibit will be an astonisher to the northwestern states and they will be lucky if they make as good a showing. Although Dakota could make a respectable exhibit of minerals and woods she concludes it is to her interest to make a complete show of her husbandry, and only adds thereto a car-load of petrefactions of woods, animals and fishes.

From what he has learned Mr. McKenzie predicts that Minnesota in her general exhibit will outshine all the other northwestern states.

Yesterday's Temperance Meeting at Mendota.

The Mendota church was crowded after high mass yesterday to listen to addresses on temperance by Rev. L. Cornelis, its pastor, and J. F. McGuire and J. F. Correre, of St. Paul. The local temperance society of forty members were in attendance in regalia, and at the close of the services a large number of gentlemen and ladies of all nationalities came forward and took the pledge. This is the first meeting held under the auspices of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society Lecture bureau of Minnesota, and the bureau propose to hold meetings all over the state the coming winter to build up to fresh work and organization Catholic total abstinence societies therein, which have grown lukewarm, and to establish new societies where none have heretofore existed.

A Railroad Princ Dethroned.

His career was short and wonderful. He rose from almost nothing and became the president of several great railroads, Suddenly his doctors command him to retire from business, if he would save his life. Overwork did it. Be wise before overwork gets the better of you. Take Brown's Iron Bitters and keep up your strength and your nervetone. E. Mayer, 231 Baronne street, New Orleans. says: "Nothing helps me like Brown's Iron Bitters. It acts like a charm."

GENERAL SCOTT AT CHESS AND WHIST.

The general was fond of the game of chess at which he was fairly skilful. I often played with him, and I think my game stood to his as about two to five; nevertheless he beat me as often as four times in five. Whenever by chance or skill, I gained a threatening position, he became irritable, and if I did not move quickly he would angrily ejaculate, "Have you moved?" One day we were playing in the parlor of the hotel at West Point, and Mr. Ogden Hoffman was looking on. In the process of that game, which I won, my chief was uncommonly tart. I took my time, and while I was considering a critical position, he reached up his hand and took up a periodical and opened it to an article on geology. "Do you think," said he to Mr. Hoffman, "That I shall be able to master this subject before the young gentleman gets ready to move?" After we had separated Mr. Hoffman came to console me for what I might think was rudeness on the part of my chief. "What did the general say?" said I; "being absorbed by my game and determined to beat him, I paid no attention to his remarks; but if there had been a hostile tone in his voice, I should have detected it at once. That's the general's manner when he is impatient, and it never hurts me."

If the general beat me easily, it was not so with his brother-in-law, Mayo, whose game was much the strongest of the three. The two brothers-in-law agreed remarkably well, considering that they differed essentially in most particulars. Mayo came frequently to play chess, and was able to beat us both if he chose to do so. Occasionally the general won a party, and that encouraged him to conclude that those he lost were accidents. One day their game was close, and they prolonged it over an hour. In the midst of it the general left his chair to spit in the fire—he then had the habit of chewing tobacco. Finally the game ended in favor of Mr. Mayo, and the general arose from his chair and took three or four turns up and down the room in silence. Then he came near me, lifted up his spectacles and said: "Young gentleman! do you know why I lost that game?" "No, sir," said I. "It was because I got up to spit."

The chief diversion of General Scott, and the one to which he was most attached, was the game of whist. The idea that without a knowledge of the game of whist a man's old age must necessarily be unhappy is said to have originated with Talleyrand. The old Frenchman's smart saying was the simple expression of the opinion of vast numbers of people of all nations, that whist and other games with cards are the most efficient promoters of cheerfulness in old age.

Whist, although it is the most genteel of all games, is the one that most frequently gives rise to altercations and disputes. All confirmed whist players end every game with a wrangle, and General Scott was not easily pleased with his partner. Occasionally, to make up the complement, I was called on to take a hand. I disliked the game and acknowledged that I played badly; but the general declared that I couldn't play at all, and when he had me for a partner he was obliged to play against three. I thought no one could please him, for he even quarrelled with dummy. It is a mistake to suppose that a confirmed whist player is satisfied with gaining the stake. On one occasion I was invited to take part in a game, and for that purpose was introduced to a polished old gentleman who was to be my partner. I excused my want of knowledge of whist; but the old gentleman in the blandest tones, insisted on my being his partner, and assured me that my ignorance of the finesse of the game would make no difference. The stake was to be $5, which was more than I ever paid before or since. I and my partner won the first game, but my blunders, which he gently rebuked, had cleared away the bland expression of his countenance. We also won the second game, and then the old man was almost rude in the manner in which he recalled my wrong plays. Finally, we gained the third party and pocketed $15 each; but the old man's passion broke loose, and throwing down his cards he declared that he could stand such stupidity no longer, and left the table.

The range of General Scott's amusements was comparatively restricted. Apart from the enjoyment he derived from ambition, fame, and reading, all his principal pleasures were embraced in the following list: Conversation—the table, including wine—the games of whist and chess.

He was entertained by aristocratic associations, by travel, fine horses, and his own personal appearance. Until the conclusion of the Mexican war, tobacco was a necessity with him; subsequently he wholly renounced the use of tobacco in all its forms. . . . For balls and dancing parties, hunting, fishing, operas and plays, he had little inclination, although his position made it necessary for him to attend them frequently. I seldom heard him speak of operas or theatrical entertainments, hunting, fisking, racing, and he appeared indifferent to all such diversions. He disliked solitude, was cheered with the company of intimate friends, and generally I regarded him as a happy man.—General E. D. Keyes, in "Fifty Years's Observation."

Capital Punch.

[Washington Letter to Boston Budget.]

A huge punch bowl is to be found in almost every house in Washington, and punch making has become a fine art. One of the most famous punch-makers was the late Charles Astor Bristed. His punches were neither too strong nor too weak. In other words, one glass would not make you drunk, neither were you obliged to drink several gallons in order to reach a point of exhilaration. This point of exhilaration is the place to stop drinking. Daniel Webster Punch is a complicated drink that calls for whiskey, rum, champagne, arrack, maraschino, green tea, lemons, sugar and a very little water. A party of distinguished Scotch gentlemen, who were in the city not long ago, during their stay were invited to visit the private residence of a prominent gentleman. During the evening a light collation was served in the dining-room and a huge punch-bowl was set out. The head of the party, a Scotchman, who at home occupies the position of provost in his native town, stepped up and tasted the punch, and, turning to an acquaintance, said: "That seems very light; I think it would take a man a long time to get drunk on that." This cool liquor glided very easily down the provost's throat, and a second glass followed. Pausing before beginning a third glass, he engaged in conversation for a moment, then he shook his head, and said, "I don't see what is the matter with me." His eyes became half shut, and as he stepped forward he nearly lost his balance. Turning in the most surprised fashion, he looked at the punch-bowl and said: "Do you know, I think that drink is very inseedious. What is it made of?" His friend replied, "Whiskey, rum, claret, champagne, sugar and lemons and a little water." The Scotchman understood at once what was the matter.

Burial of Butler.

Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note,
As his corse to the rampart we hurried;
Not a soldier discharged his farewell shot
O'er the ditch where Ben Butler was buried.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

WEBER PIANOS.

Acknowledged by Artists the Best in the World.

I know of none superior to the Weber and none that can compete with them for durability.—Teresa Carreno.

The tone of the Weber Piano is so sweet, rich and sympathetic, yet so full, that I shall always rank you as the greatest manufacturer of the day.—Emma Thursby.

Weber Pianos excel all others in volume of tone and in power of expression.—S. Liebling.

There are no Pianos in the world that sustain the voice like the Weber.—Emma Abbott.

PRESCRIPTIONS A SPECIALTY

STATE OF MINNESOTA, DISTRICT COURT. County of Ramsey, Second Judicial District.
In the matter of the Assignment of Riddell & Clarke, Assignors to George H. Smith, Assignee.

On reading the petition of George H. Smith, assignee of the abovenamed assignors, asking that a time be fixed within which the creditors of the said assignors may file their claims and releases thereof.

It is ordered that the creditors of said assignors in the above entitled matter file proofs and releases of their claims against said assignors with said assignee, or with the clerk of the court above named, on or before the 29th day of November, A. D. 1884, on pain of being debarred of any dividend or share in the proceeds of said assigned estate.

That this order be served upon all the creditors who have not filed releases of their claims by mailing a copy thereof postpaid to their respective places of residence, on or before the 18th instant, and by publishing a copy thereof in the Saint Paul DAILY GLOBE, on the 17th, 20th and 24th days of the present month.

Dated Saint Paul, November 15th, 1884.
