RAIN PREVENTS YANKEES FROM GOING TO FRONT

Locals Fail to Battle Tigers, While White Sox Gain Lap by Beating Athletics—Giants at Last Overcome Miller Jinx and Beat Pirates—Dodgers Lose to Reds, Who Are Looming Up as Giants' Most Dangerous Rivals.

By Hugh S. Fullerton.

Copyright, 1918, by The Press Publishing Co. (The New York Evening World).

RAIN interrupted the rush of the Yankees toward the top of the American League race yesterday and held them while the White Sox gained a lap by trimming the Athletics.

Manager Huggins had his crew at the ball orchard in the morning, prepping them for another assault upon Detroit, but the mud was so deep and the going so heavy, the skies so leaky that he called off the contest late in the forenoon, and then, as usual, the skies cleared and ceased to leak, and a contest which might have landed the Yanks on top in the race could have been played.

Hereafter baseball clubs may hire weather prognosticators to assist the managers.

Meantime the Giants, after a hard fight, overcame their old jinx, Miller of the Pirates, and finally won a game from Rezdek's crew, and won it by sheer force of rushing attack on the bases, as Miller did his part and held the Giant sluggers to fewer hits than the lowly Pirates made off Jess Barnes. The Giants scored early, and it was a hard triple by Rodriguez that dpest the Pirates and scored two runs. Evidently the jinx which Miller has had on the Giants does not extend to the newcomers on the team.

Brooklyn encountered the coming Reds, who are looming now as the most dangerous opponent the Giants must tackle, and were beaten in ten innings after a heroic defense. Three times the Reds seemed to have the game won and each time the Robperbas made a great stand and staved off their attack, only to bow before a higher class club in the ninth inning.

MILLER Huggins is commencing to be satisfied with his ball club, although not entirely. He is confident that its new found punch power will cover the minor defects in the team. The day of real yesterday was not entirely unwelcome, as Huggins's pitching staff still is short handed and will be until the team finds a new man or Caldwell's injured arm comes around into shape, which it is discouragingly slow in doing. A glance at the standing of the clubs will show that, had Caldwell's arm been in condition when the season started, as it always has been in other seasons, the Yanks would be leading the American League by three or four games and the fans would be even now arranging with the scalpers for seats to the World's Series between the two New York clubs.

Huggins' team has tackled the majority of the teams in the league and thus far not one club has shown any marked superiority over the Yanks. The team has shown a fighting spirit and an aggressiveness that was not suspected before, and it has shown especial versatility in attack and a driving power that is not surpassed either by the Red Sox or the Tigers, two teams supposed to be their hitting superiors. In spite of spotty and often bad pitching, the team is right up to the leader and it looks now as if the American League race will be closer even than it figured to be.

The Red Sox in losing Hoblitzel have had the one big weakness of their team revealed. That weakness is lack of reserve strength and lack of versatility. If Barrow can win with the team he will be the logical "miracle man of the season. With Hoblitzel gone he must either decide upon Ruth as a first baseman, which will hurt the great pitching staff, or he must send McInnis back to first and play Thomas at third. Either way, the team does not assume as strong enough to shut the Chicago White Sox, the Browns, the Clevelands or the Yanks, especialy when the White Sox get into their stride, which they have not yet hit. The dangerous symptom about the White Sox was that yesterday Red Faber pitched a great game against the Athletics, which gives Rowland two pitchers in condition instead of one.

THE selling for the Giants does not seem as smooth as it did a week ago. In fact, the entire community is agog over the condition of Ferdie Schupp. Schupp's arm and Rosie Quinn's leg give New Yorkers almost as much material toward making conversation as the war does. Schupp seems to have fallen victim to the ailment that wrecks the careers of so many left-handed pitchers—displacement of the muscles in the shoulder. Just why left-handed pitchers should be more apt to suffer from displaced muscles than right handers is a mystery. Schupp has visited "Bonesetter" Reese at Youngstown and had the ligament jerked back into its proper position, and the Bonesetter has ordered two weeks' rest. Also he has notified Schupp that another slip of the muscle means probable permanent retirement as a pitcher, which would be a catastrophe for him and for the Giants.

Jack Priester of the Cubs, Jess Tannehill, Doc White, Danny Friend, Eddie Doheny and several other star left-handers lost their power in the same way. The ligament attaching the upper arm muscle to the shoulder slid out of place, allowing the muscle to contract and bunch on the forearm, and few ever recover from the effects of such displacement.

With Doyle sick and Schupp out of commission for the rest of the Western trip, the Giants will not find the path flowery. The Cincinnati Reds are playing real baseball, are fighting for every game, and they have formed the Giant habit of coming from behind with a terrific attack and winning when seemingly beaten. They nosed out the St. Louis Cards in four straight games, winning all in the ninth inning.

Although the Giants have a team batting average of .300 for the present season, it is useless to expect any team to maintain that sort of hitting, and the final figures of the season probably will show that Cincinnati is the stronger hitting club.

The Chicago Cubs while still sticking up in the race, are not the dangerous club they seem. They are dangerous only because of great pitching, and then the pitching is bad, as it has been against Boston, the club is not hard to beat. However, Phil Douglas, a great pitcher, who has been out because of an appendicitis operation, is almost ready to go to work, giving Mitchell another effective stopper for the Giants.

The Western teams will make it as hard as possible for the Giants, but there is no real danger as the Giants have the class.

THESE are days of big worry for managers and owners. A manager when he arises in the morning don't know whether to look for his team in the nearest barracks or on the field. Yesterday it was reported that Walter Pipp had enlisted, and Manager Huggins had an anxious hour or two. Pipp was at the grounds and did not mention enlisting. Indeed, he had decided to wait until called in the draft, although he may go at any moment, which would hit the wrecking crew hard. With Whitted of the Phils, Hoblitzel of the Red Sox, Jackson of the White Sox all gone in a few days, and others ready to go, baseball is uncertain business.

THE trench warfare in baseball still goes on. Evidently there is something behind the constant attacks upon the new International League which may come to the surface at any moment. Now the International is threatening to sue H. Clay Smith of Danville, Ill., for $10,000, which they charge he still owes on the purchase price of the Newark team, and Smith is threatening to sue the International for $10,000, which he says he lost in operating the Newark club for two years. He wants his claim to stand as a set-off against the Newark Club franchise. The National Commission seems to be withholding sanction from the new little league, and the International is going ahead without reference to the supreme court of baseball.

BASEBALL was the last of the sports to feel the pinch of war, but now each succeeding week marks the passing from the diamond of some big star. Joe Jackson, the old Cleveland player for whom President Comiskey of the White Sox paid a fortune, has started working in a Wilmington shipyard. It is possible that Joe, who was about to be called into the army, took this step to avoid serving in the more dangerous work of trench fighting. It is certain that any one who is engaged in such work as ship-building is entitled to claim exemption from the draft.

No matter why Jackson has left baseball—the fact remains that he has gone, and his passing robs the Chicago team of one of the biggest factors in its winning of the world's title last fall. Joe, or "Shoeless Joe," as he is sometimes called, is one of the most interesting characters that ever donned a uniform.

Although he had a bad year last year—probably due to worrying because of his being in the draft—Jackson has been Ty Cobb's bitterest rival ever since he entered big league company back in 1910. It is funny, but no matter how hard Jackson hit the Georgia Peach has always gone him one better. Jackson has been the thorn in Ty's side that has made him extend himself.

In the World Series last fall Jackson did fair work. There was nothing sensational about his playing, but he managed to swat his way into the select batting class with a mark of .304, while his fielding was perfect. He had nine put outs and an assist, but not an error.

Jackson is one of the few natural hitters. He has never dropped below the .300 class since he has been in baseball. His average for the eight years he has been in fast company is close to .360—some record, what?

Of recent years they haven't called him "Shoeless Joe," but for a long while that was his nickname. He acquired this appellation in a funny way.

It was while he was playing a game at Anderson for Greenville in the Grangers State League that he wore new shoes one day that so blistered his feet that when he showed up for the next game of the series he could hardly walk. His manager insisted on his playing, as he was the real star of the team. The pain was so excruciating that Joe had to take off his shoes. Then it was that somebody in the bleachers shouted: "Hey, 'Shoeless Joe!' at him and the name has stuck.

It was in 1907, when he was about nineteen years old, that Joe started his professional career as a pitcher with Greenville. The organization folded until July, when it waited. The following season it started up again and went the route, he banged out, among other things, twenty-seven homeruns. This fact attracted Connie Mack and he signed and up for the Athletics.

One day in the fall, before the American League season shut down, Joe wandered into Philadelphia. This town appeared too big a jump to him at first, so he quietly went out again, and after nine days in vain there he left the Athletics to their fate.

This digression caused Joe to be suspended by the powers that be in baseball. In 1909 he was reinstated and went to the southern training camp with the Mackmen. He was sent to Savanah in the South Atlantic League and pitted .354. In 1910 he played with New Orleans and faced the ball at a .384 clip.

It was during the season of 1910 that Connie Mack parted one of the few times he has been guilty of his sold his option on Jackson, along with trading of Morma Roth to Cleveland for Outfielder Pinson Lord. The Naps called Jackson to their side and he finished the year with them, his first year in his sensational performance of hitting .387.

It was while the Cleveland was playing at the Polo Grounds that Jackson sent the ball on the longest flight that it has ever taken there. The leather went over the top of the upper tier of the right field stands.

One of the biggest things that Jackson ever did in his baseball career was to clinch the pennant for New Orleans in 1915 in the first game of the double-header with Memphis he made four hits in four times up and in the second game three hits in three times up.

Jack stands 5 feet 10 inches and weighs about 180 pounds. He looks every inch the part of a ballplayer. He hits left-handed and throws right-handed. He has five brothers and two sisters. His father conducts a butcher shop at Greenville and Joe has a lot of fun each winter when he returns there and gets the old man to cut steaks and talk baseball which helps business.

WINNERS MAY FLIP COIN FOR FAMOUS WOODLAWN VASE

Owing to Large Field Preakness Stakes Being Run To-Day in Two Divisions.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 15.—The Preakness Stakes for three-year-olds at one mile and a furlong in two divisions will be run at Pimlico to-day.

It was a sporting thing for the Maryland Jockey Club to add another $15,000 and divide the race, for with a field of twenty-six horses named over night, and practically every one of them certain to go, the race could not have been truly run.

Whether the owners of the winners will flip a coin for the famous Woodlawn Vase will not be decided until their horses have been led into the charmed circle in front of the judges' stand. One thing is certain—the winner of each section will be worthy of the rich purse and the honors that go with it.

It has so chanced that the fields in each section, although drawn by lot, could not have been better balanced had the division been made by the handicapper. Fifteen horses will go to the post in the first section, which will be the fourth race on the card, and eleven will face the starter in the second, which will be run about one hour later.

On the face of it, the first division might well be the big race, for A. K. Macomber's War Cloud, unplaced in the Kentucky Derby, George D. Widener's Lucius, H. P. Whitney's Flag and Johren and Wilfred Viau's George Starr, among others, will clash.

In the second section Col. Applegate's Jack Hare jr., a colt of his first flight and a three-time winner on the Maryland tracks, will meet the French bred Trompe La Mort of Joseph E. Widener's stirling, George W. Loft's Arab to On, Andrew Miller's Recount, F. E. Hitchcock's Frank the Porter and others of nearly equal class.

George Starr and Fairground, J. R. L. Rose's candidate, which was one second to Omar Khayyam earlier in the meeting, clears are well thought of.

Most every one is hoping for a fast track or even a moderately good one, and if there is no rain to-morrow this is assured, for it was drying rapidly late afternoon.

All Baltimore that cares to come will be the guests of the Maryland Jockey Club for the Preakness. After the steeplechase, which will be the first event on the card, and the gates of the track will be thrown open and the populace invited into the free area to see the big races. Half a company of soldiers will keep the enthusiasts more or less in good order. The only drawback to this is the fact that there will be no pari mutuels for us to wager on, so we will be obliged to be content with betting on lack lady chances.

The entries in the race meeting of the United Hunt, at Belmont Park Terminal, May 25, will come to-day, and those for the International Military race will be received up to Saturday. Seven races are on the card, with the prize money reaching the total of $15,000.

Cobweb, 2.12, the first champion of the Harlem River speedway, died yesterday at the country home of his owner, Nathan Straus, near Port Chester, N. Y. He was thirty years old, having been foaled in 1888 at Don Cameron Shafter's Palo Alto Farm, Menlo Park, Cal., on the site of the present Leland Stanford University. Cobweb earned his record in a race at Hampton on 1891 driven by W. P. Fenelon. It was then sold to the late A. G. Vanderbilt, who at the latter purchased the colt for the road.

From Diamond to Trenches

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 15.—George Whitted, star outfielder of the Phillies, will report at Camp Merritt, N. J., May 21. Whitted has been referred to as one of the luckiest ball players in the game owing to his good fortune in being traded to clubs that won the pennant the year he was obtained. He is twenty-seven years old.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 15.—William Dilhoeter, catcher for the Phillies, who figured in the trade last autumn that brought the Alexander-Killifer battery to the Chicago Cubs, has enlisted in the army and will leave the club next week. Dilhoeter was with the Cubs last season.

ST. PAUL, May 15.—Henry Bates, third baseman of the St. Paul American Association Club, has passed his physical examination for the National Army. He probably will report for service within ten days.

MEDFORD, Mass., May 15.—The Tufts College baseball team to-day lost the services of its coach, Dr. Walter J. York, who was notified to report for active duty as a lieutenant in the Army Dental Corps. Under Dr. York's guidance the team has won all its games except one this season.

BOSTON, May 15.—Hebblitzel, first baseman and captain of the Boston American League baseball team, has been nominated by President Wilson to be a First Lieutenant in the Army Dental Corps. With Hoblitzel in the Dental Corps, Shoffy Melanie, formerly first baseman with the Philadelphia Athletics, is slated to play first base for the Red Sox. Thomas last year with Providence, is expected to fill McInnis's place at third.

Ed Monroe, one of Miller Huggins's second string twirlers, has quit the Yankees. He turned in his uniform and left for the shipbuilding plant of the Bethlehem Steel Company at Sparrow Point, Md.

First Sabbath Game in Capital On Sunday Next

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Sunday baseball will be played in Washington, beginning next Sunday, by American League clubs. The Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia legalized the playing of professional games by rescinding regulations prohibiting them.

PHILADELPHIA, May 15.—Faber defeated Perry in a pitchers' battle, Chicago winning by a score of 3 to 0. The first hit off Perry followed a pass to Murphy, and Gandil's sacrifice fly scored the winning run. Gandil drove in Chicago's second run with a double and scored the final tally on J. Collins's single. Faber held Philadelphia hitless for six and two-thirds innings, not a man reaching first. With two out in the ninth, singles by Jacobson and Kopp, a wild pitch and a walk to Walker filled the bases, but Bono grounded to McMullin.

Columbia has baseball games with two local colleges this week. The first comes this afternoon when the Lead Blue and White will meet the Princeton nine on South Field. On Saturday morning Yale will take the Columbia boys to Baker Field, where they will play a return game with the Brown collegians.

According to a statement by Charles T. Chapin, owner of the Rochester Club, the New International League is ready to start action against H. Clay Smith of Danville, Ill., a moderate stockholder in the Newark club of the old International League, for $10,000 alleged to be due on the sale of the Newark franchise to him in 1916. Mr. Smith is said to have paid only $1,000 of the $25,000 agreed upon as the franchise price.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 15.—The Eastern League Schedule Committee has revised the schedule, because the opening of the "Lord's Day League" at Rocky Point, R. I., is scheduled against the Providence club morning, afternoon and night. Consequently the Sunday morning contest between the two clubs has been changed to Monday morning, and the new schedule would be released now, only the last of the week.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 15.—The Army-Navy annual baseball game which was scheduled to be played at Annapolis June 1 has been declared off. It was announced here to-day.
