HOPER IS ACCUSED

BY THE HASTINGS HOSPITAL ADVOCATES OF A "SELF-CONFESSED FRAUD."

HAS BETRAYED THE STATE

ON ACCOUNT OF HIS FAVORITISM OF CERTAIN OF HIS NEIGHBORS.

OPPOSED TO PUBLIC POLICY.

Down River Folk Insist That the Court Rebuke His Conduct and Annul His Act.

The first case to be heard in the supreme court, which will not, however, be until Wednesday, as the court yesterday adjourned until after electioin, is the controversy between the cities of Anoka and Hastings for the possession of the fourth state insane hospital. Nominally, the suit is brought by the state on the information of Attorney General Childs against the members of the state board appointed to select a location for the institution. Quite an array of legal talent will appear in the case, for besides Attorney General Childs, the state will be represented by Stringer & Seymour, Hodgson & Schaller and John M. Gilman. The commission will be defended by Warner, Richardson & Lawrence. While the minority commissioners, Messrs. Smith, Bondy and Carlson, still have E. S. Derment, of this city engaged. George H. Wyman appears for the city of Anoka.

The brief of the appellants was filed in the supreme court yesterday. It is claimed that the Ramsey county district court erred in the following ruling:

First, in holding that the commission did not accept the proposition of the city of Hastings to sell the state a site Dec. 18.

Second. In holding that to constitute a binding contract with the city of Hastings for the purchase of the site offered by said city, it was necessary that it should be accepted in writing and signed by the respective parties; third, in holding that the said offer or proposition of the city of Hastings was not accepted in writing signed by the respective parties; fourth, in holding that there was no binding contract between the city of Hastings and the state for the purchase of a site for the hospital; fifth, in holding that the action of the commission at its meeting in St. Paul, Dec. 18, 1895, in selecting Hastings as the location of the hospital, did not thereby exhaust and render its powers functus officio in respect to the place where the hospital should be located; sixth, in holding that when this action was brought, nothing of substance remained to be done by the commission, to which the injunction could apply; seventh, in holding that the Anoka site had been acquired and the deed therefor delivered to the state auditor, and that the act of acquisition was consummated so far as within the power of the board, and that nothing remained for the board to do, but to cause hospital plans to be prepared and make report of their doings to the legislature; eighth, in holding that, at the meeting of said commissioin at Fergus Falls, Minn., Dec. 27, 1895, that the viva voce vote of Henry Hoper should be counted as a vote to locate said fourth hospital for the insane at the city of Anoka; ninth, in dissolving the injunction.

Following the statement of facts, the argument takes up the contention that the contract was consummated when on the ninth ballot, Hastings received a majority of the votes. The attorneys contend:

As Hastings had submitted but one proposition, a vote for Hastings can only be interpreted as a vote to accept the Hastings proposition. If there had been more than one proposition from Hastings, as was the case with Anoka, then further action would be necessary to designate which of the sites offered would be accepted. But there was but one proposition from Hastings.

Second. But if there is any doubt as to what was intended by the commissioners in voting for Hastings at the meeting on the 18th day of December, it is perfectly competent for them to testify as to what they intended by such vote. A number of cases are cited:

The affidavit of Messrs. Smith, Bondy and Carlson is quoted to sustain the contention that the action of the board when voting was intended by all the members of the commission to be a final and full selection of a site for the hospital. It continues:

Our statute, Sec. 4215, Compiled Statutes 1894, only requires the contract for the sale of land, or some note or memorandum thereof, expressing the consideration to be in writing "and subscribed by the party by whom the lease or sale is to be made, or his lawful agent thereunto, authorized in writing." It does not require any acceptance of an offer or proposition to be signed by the purchaser, or to be in writing. Our statute in this respect is a transcript from the statute of New York, Michigan and Wisconsin, and it is well settled in these states that the acceptance of an offer or proposition need not be in writing subscribed by the purchaser.

But the Hastings proposition was, in point of fact, accepted in writing by the commissioners. If the vote taken on Dec. 18, 1895, is to be considered as a vote upon the acceptance or non-acceptance, then the meagre record kept by the secretary shows its acceptance by the commission. And the affidavits of Bondy, Carlson and Smith show that the Hastings proposition was accepted and the officials thereof immediately notified and informed of such acceptance, and the mayor of said city thereafter officially informed the city council of Hastings that said hospital had been located at Hastings.

Cases are cited to establish that the commission had no right to reconsider its decision once determined upon. County supervisors, council committees and a Dakota county case are among those referred to along this line. The Duluth city assessorship's case is also cited.

The argument deals at some length with the plea of the defense that there was nothing left to enjoin when the suit was brought, and finally goes at length into the change of mind experienced by Commissioner Hoper after that meeting. It says:

The vote of Hoper amounts simply to this He votes that Hastings was the best site for the hospital, but that from motives of personal preference he will not vote for the best site, but for one which, in his judgment, is inferior.

Public policy will not permit him to betray the interests of his principal in that manner. Here is no concealment of his position, but an open announcement of the result of his deliberations. We submit that the mere form in which he submits the result of his deliberations to the commission cannot alter the effect of them. And in this connection, it will be remembered that this is not an action between individuals, but an action by the plaintiff in its capacity as a sovereign state.

The courts have gone very far in cases of this sort, in permitting an inquiry to be made into the motives and the reasons for action taken by legislative agents of this character. The courts have gone much farther than it is necessary to go here, and declare that where the motives are not manifest in the action of the legislative agent, that public policy requires that they may be investigated. Of course, the motives which may lie concealed in the mind of a judge or of a legislator cannot be shown to effect or impeach the result, yet this principle is confined in its operations in cases of municipal agencies to actions between third parties, and does not apply to an action brought in the name of the state.

So applying the doctrine to this case, it would be perfectly proper to show by extrinsic evidence that Mr. Hoper acted fraudulently in casting his vote for Anoka. That is not necessary for here is a self-confessed fraudulent act. Here is an agent who is appointed to select a site which is the most advantageous to the state of Minnesota, and who attempts to deliberately betray his principal, the state of Minnesota, by declaring that he refuses to exercise the judgment which his commission required him to exercise, but on account of favoritism to certain of his neighbors, votes for a site which his judgment condemned. We cannot believe that under the authorities cited and under the most general principles of law applicable to the case of principal and agent, that this vote can be counted as a vote for Anoka.

In the language of the courts when considering a vote of this sort, the essential requisite is the determination of the commission and not the form and manner of expressing that determination, and when Commissioner Hoper announced that he had determined that Hastings was the best site, sound public policy will not permit him to betray his trust and to vote for another city. It is an attempt on his part to substitute the judgment of his petitioners, who have never seen this land, for his own judgment, after he has made careful and deliberate investigation of the merits of this property.

Jury Couldn't Agree.

The jury in the case of Leon and H. Michaels and J. F. Hotz, who were tried in the police court on a charge of the larceny of a picture from Mrs. Lizzie McKenzie, failed to agree. The twelve men were out four hours, and as they reported no chance for an agreement, the court discharged them. The case was continued yesterday to Nov. 6.

THE CALCIUM LIGHT IS THROWN ON THE RETIRING SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT.

HIGH TRIBUTES WERE PAID

TO PROF. CHARLES B. GILBERT BY EDUCATORS AND OTHER CITIZENS.

THE FAREWELL RECEPTION

Given Last Night in His Honor at Central High School Assembly Hall.

Superintendent of Schools Charles B. Gilbert bade farewell to the citizens of St. Paul last night. The occasion will prove a memorable one, memorable not alone for the profound regret that attended the parting, but never to be forgotten by those to whom Supt. Gilbert addressed his parting words. They were earnest, noble words, every one of them an appeal for the public schools of this city.

"Your schools are in danger," was the warning. "There are those in high places who stand in their way, because they do not believe in a broad education of your children. Look to them, I say. See that they keep their hands off the schools. See that they do not cut down the salaries of your underpaid teachers. Rouse public sentiment, that it may go to the rescue of the schools; for public sentiment is the only power that can elevate your schools!"

Supt. Gilbert's earnest words created a deep impression.

The formal programme of the succeeding farewell reception took place in the Central high school assembly hall. Nearly every seat was occupied, though the ladies were in the majority, as they invariably are when the schools are concerned, there was a liberal attendance of well known professional and business men. The board of school inspectors was represented by four members, Dr. E. J. Abbott, the president, and Inspectors Wilkes, May and Yoerg. The other three were unavoidably absent.

The formal programme opened shortly before 9 p. m. When Supt. Gilbert ascended the stage, preceded by President Abbott, of the school board, ex-School Inspector J. G. Pyle and Kenneth Clark, a hearty outburst of applause greeted him. The other members of the school board followed, and after them, Prof. George Weitbrecht, of the mechanic arts school, Dr. George Bridgman, of Hamline university; Miss Sarah C. Brooks, supervisor of the primary grades, and President Irwin Shepard, of the Winona Normal school. Dr. Bridgman presided.

Before presenting the first speaker Dr. Bridgman paid a brief tribute to Supt. Gilbert. He said that Minnesota had been singularly fortunate in securing the right men to develop her educational system. The state could feel justly proud of her three illustrious educators: Cyrus Northrop, the model university president; Irwin Shepard, the normal school president, and Charles B. Gilbert, the retiring superintendent of the St. Paul schools. In Supt. Gilbert the city of St. Paul had had a man of rare scholarship, superior educational talents and unusual executitve ability.

"It won't harm him to tell him to his face how much we think of him, how highly we appreciate the educational work he has done in this city, and how deeply we regret his departure," said Dr. Bridgman. "I believe in bestowing flowers upon a worthy man while he lives and can enjoy them instead of strewing them on his coffin." Dr. Bridgman then announced that Prof. Weitbrecht would speak of the influence of Supt. Gilbert's work in the high school.

Prof. Weitbrecht said that there were three things or methods that distinguished Supt. Gilbert's achievements in the high school. The first of these methods was the "laboratory method," and in the "laboratory method" were included such aids to education as libraries, pictures, decorations and other means of providing the pupils with practical means of instruction. It was true that Supt. Gilbert had not invented the laboratory method, but he had induced the board of education to secure the means of providing the necessary materials to work with. "Today," he said, "when we tell the board of education that a thing is necessary we get it. Everywhere I go I find that the St. Paul high school is famous for its library and laboratory."

Prof. Weitbrecht said that the second great method was the system of marking adopted by Supt. Gilbert. Under the former system a student could remain idle during the term, and yet by means of a clever coach, he could secure a high enough mark to be promoted. But under the present system the student's promotion depended upon the judgment of the teacher.

The third great thing that characterized Supt. Gilbert's government, continued Prof. Weitbrecht, was his method of discipline employed. The great rule adopted was that every girl and boy in the school should behave like a lady or gentleman. Thus the pupils were placed upon their honor, and their teachers at once put confidence in them. This trust in students and this trust in teachers was the outgrowth of this beautiful system.

In conclusion Prof. Weitbrecht paid an earnest tribute to the personal character of Supt. Gilbert.

On behalf of the alumni of the high school, Mrs. Conde Hamlin bore testimony to the beneficial effects of the methods introduced by Prof. Gilbert. Mrs. Hamlin said that not a student passed through the high school without feeling that Supt. Gilbert was his personal friend. All the alumni of the high school, Mrs. Hamlin said, felt a sense of gratitude to Prof. Gilbert. The St. Paul alumni should always stand behind the high school. They should exert a more positive and unified influence. It would not be too much to ask that the alumni be represented on the board of education. In behalf of the alumni Mrs. Hamlin extended to Supt. Gilbert their best wishes for his future.

The programme was varied at this point with a solo by Mrs. C. B. Yale.

Miss Sarah C. Brooks spoke of the work that Supt. Gilbert had done for the graded schools of St. Paul. Before the advent of Supt. Gilbert, the teachers felt that there was a lack of life, interest, and all-round growth in the grade schools. When Supt. Gilbert came he at once gave the teachers rein and license to investigate the educational problems then being agitated. The improvement that culminated in the condition of these schools today was due to Supt. Gilbert. Miss Brooks found, while visiting other cities, that the public teachers generally were eager to express their gratitude to Prof. Gilbert for the encouragement his words and his able papers on the science of education had given them.

In kindergarten work, too, Supt. Gilbert's work had been noticeably effective, and herein the moral benefit was perhaps more significant than the intellectual. Miss Brooks thought that it was the duty of the teacher to continue to follow Supt. Gilbert's admirable method.

Dr. E. J. Abbott, the president of the board of school inspectors, was the next speaker. Dr. Abbott took as his text the Latin apothegm, "poeta nascitur, non fit."

"This may not be the Latin of today," said Dr. Abbott, "for though it is a dead language, I find its pronunciation changing on me. A liberal translation of my text is "A school superintendent is born, not made." (Applause).

Dr. Abbott related in an amusing way, the trials and petty annoyances that the superintendent of schools is necessarily subjected to. But it was in his dealings with the school board that the superintendent had the hardest time. As for Supt. Gilbert, his life had been an open book to the people of St. Paul. All could truthfully say that the high school had never had as good a principal as Mr. Gilbert. After he became superintendent of schools, a new line of work opened up to him. But he proved equal to the task before him, and made a name for himself as one of the ablest educators in the United States. (Applause).

Dr. Abbott said, in conclusion, that the school board would like, if it could afford it, to raise Mr. Gilbert's salary and bring him back to St. Paul. This declaration met with hearty and prolonged applause.

School Inspector Wilkes then made a brief speech. He assured his hearers that it was a bad night outside, but a good night to assemble within and pay a tribute to Supt. Gilbert, who was the ablest superintendent of schools St. Paul had ever had.

President Shepard, of the Winona normal school was next introduced. Prof. Shepard said that it was always pleasant to pay tribute to one who deserved it. It was more than that, it was a duty. Prof. Shepard first became acquainted with Supt. Gilbert eighteen years ago, when the latter was chosen principal of the Winona high school, and he, Prof. Shepard, became superintendent of the Winona schools. It was then that Prof. Shepard discovered Supt. Gilbert's abilities, his love of high ideals and his superior educational methods. His success as principal of the Winona high school was most pronounced. Prof. Shepard confessed that he advised Supt. Gilbert, after he came to St. Paul, not to resign the principalship of the St. Paul high school to accept the superintendency of the St. Paul schools, believing his proper field was the high school

But as soon as he became superintendent he again demonstrated the same rare aptitude in grasping the duties of that responsible position. Prof. Shepard discussed Supt. Gilbert's influence upon the school teachers throughout the state of Minnesota, and traced his growth among educators until the time arrived when he was finally recognized as one of the prominent educators of the country, and was honored with a place upon the national committee on education, whose membership included fifteen of the most famous educators. Supt. Gilbert's work on this committee earned him still greater distinction.

Prof. Shepard referred to the paper or report submitted by Supt. Gilbert at the Jacksonville convention, and read significant passages from it, illustrative of the philosophical character of the superintendent's address. Prof. Shepard remarked, in this connection, that Supt. Gilbert's philosophy was not in the air, as a visit to the St. Paul schools had demonstrated to the satisfaction of all those interested in the educational problem.

In conclusion, Prof. Shepard said that the departure of Supt. Gilbert from Minnesota was seriously to be regretted, but it was getting to be the custom for the East to come to the West for its educators. All the teachers in the state of Minnesota, would, Prof. Shepard knew, join in bidding Mr. Gilbert Godspeed in his new field of labor.

Dr. Bridgman then introduced J. W. L. Corning, who testified to the esteem and admiration in which Supt. Gilbert is held by the citizens of St. Paul.

Mr. Corning said he realized that Supt. Gilbert had had a good deal to contend with in St. Paul. There had been a good many criticisms as to the expense of the school system, particularly on the part of those who thought that the three R's, "readin', ritin' and 'rithmetic," constituted all the education anybody needed. Mr. Corning thought that many of these critics really weren't "up" in the three R's, and didn't know much more about education, anyway.

Mr. Corning said that Mr. Gilbert's influence for good, morally and intellectually, had been beyond a doubt strong and far-reaching in the public schools of St. Paul.

Dr. Bridgman then asked J. G. Pyle to say a few words, inasmuch as he had once been a member of the school board. Hr. Pyle had not expected to be called upon, and was notified only a few moments before.

Mr. Pyle said that it was a great pleasure to him as a citizen of no mean city, and also as a man, to add a few words to what had already been said. Mr. Pyle explained how, as a member of the school board, he first came to know Mr. Gilbert, first as a superintendent of public schools, and lastly as a man. It was then that he appreciated the full worth of the man, and realized the nobility of his heart as well as the distinction of his intellect. Mr. Pyle paid the highest compliment to Supt. Gilbert's superior endowments and qualifications as an educator. His was a mind of rare poise. That nice balancing of the mechanical, intellectual and spiritual elements in education was a very delicate and difficult task, but Mr. Gilbert accomplished it. Mr. Gilbert had steered happily between the two extremes of dull routine and the visionary impracticable policies of unsuccessful educators.

"Mr. Gilbert has been and will be a force that uplifts the community," concluded Mr. Pyle. "Mr. Gilbert's words are inspiring, his purpose high, his impulses noble, his fidelity unquestioned. He will leave behind him a memory that is an inspiration."

Dr. Bridgman then arose, and after congratulating Supt. Gilbert upon the tributes of love and esteem that had been showered upon him, said that all would like to hear something from him in return. Supt. Gilbert complied with the request, and as he advanced to the front of the stage he was received with enthusiastic and prolonged applause. When the demonstration had subsided Supt. Gilbert began in a voice that unmistakably betrayed his emotion.

"Ladies and Gentlemen and Dear Friends: Perhaps you think I feel comfortable. I am not always at a loss for words, but words almost desert me now. I am overwhelmed by your presence. I am completely buried under the avalanche of kindly fictions heaped upon me tonight. To you, fellow citizens, who have come here tonight out of kindness and friendship, I wish to say that your coming means more than a personal tribute. Your coming here shows your great interest in your schools.

"I wish to make to you a brief appeal. Your schools are in danger! You have a school board composed of strong, brave men. But there are others in high places who stand in the way of your schools. They do not believe in a broad education of the children. See that they keep their hands off the schools! See that they do not reduce the salaries of your underpaid teachers. Appeal to public sentiment for that is the only thing that can raise the schools."

Supt. Gilber then appealed to the boys and girls and the alumni of the high school, to be true to themselves and the schools. He was sure they could not help but be so. To the teachers, Supt. Gilbert said:

"Keep the child before you. The child is the most beautiful creation of God! Keep your ideals high. Devote your lives to the moulding of the child's character. There is no work in the world to be compared to it.

"And so, old friends, young friends and dear friends, all of you look to the future."

This concluded the programme, and then followed the informal reception, when every man and woman present pressed forward and grasped the hand of Supt. Gilbert, gave him their best wishes for the future, and bade him God speed.

During the evening Mrs. C. B. Yale and Oscar Lemau sang solos, and concert music was contributed by the Troubadour male quartette.

DUNLAP ARRESTED AGAIN.

Old Romance of Minneapolis Is Recalled.

One of the early romances of Minneapolis is recalled by the arrest in Chicago Thursday of James Dunlap on a charge of safe blowing. A safe was recently robbed in Englewood, and the prisoner was seized in company with a crook known as "Peoria Tom" Ryan.

Dunlap was one of the robbers of the Northampton, Mass., bank, over twenty years ago, he and Robert C. Scott being sentenced to twenty-one years each. Scott died in prison after serving four years of his sentence, and his dying request to his wife was to work for the pardon of Dunlap. The last words he spoke were: "Mary, never desert poor Jim, for I am the cause of his being where he is."

Mrs. Scott married John E. Rowland, of Chicago, in 1883. Rowland was a well-known hotelkeeper. From the day of Scott's death until 1891 Mrs. Rowland devoted the greater part of her time to visiting Dunlap, working for his release, and succeeded in interesting some prominent men in the case, among them Gen. W. T. Sherman, ex-Gov. Russell, of Massachusetts, and George Abbott James, the Boston philanthropist.

Of the $2,600,000 taken from the bank, $1,000,000 was recovered when the men were caught.

An effort to secure Dunlaps pardon was inaugurated in 1887 by President Edwards, of the Northampton bank, seconded by the governor of the state and Robert Pinkerton. The board of pardons finally gave him his liberty in December, 1891.

Mrs. Scott-Rowland is now living in New York city, where she is reputed to be wealthy. In her efforts to secure Dunlap's pardon is is said she spent many thousands of dollars.

Dunlap, who is now sixty years old, used to be a brakeman on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad thirty-five years ago. He fought bravely in the war of the rebellion to uphold the Union, and suffers today from wounds he received in battle. He ran out of Chicago on the Rock Island for two or three years, and then turned safe robber. With Scott and Dave Cummings he robbed the Quincy bank of $85,000 in currency and $25,000 in securities. The gang next robbed the Falls City National bank of $400,000. The robbery of several other banks was laid to Dunlap and his "pals," and finally, in 1876, the cunning piece of work of the gang was the robbery of the Northampton bank.

Dunlap spent some time in Minneapolis in the early 70's, and his wife, who secured a divorce from him since his incarceration, married a Minneapolis attorney who has since risen to some local prominence.

NOT TAMS BIXBY'S FIGURES.

Estimates in Minnesota Which He Never Furnished.

A report has appeared in a number of newspapers, purporting to be the final estimate of Tams Bixby, sent to Chairman Hanna. It reads as follows:

Our last poll of Minnesota shows McKinley's majority at least 15,000. Have strong hopes of more. Minneapolis is uncertain, and may go 5,000 either way. St. Paul is safe. Also First, Second, Fourth and Fifth congressional districts are sure Republican. Chances are good for carrying the Third, Sixth and Seventh districts.

Mr. Bixby said last night that he had not furnished any such figures. The state will go for McKinley, he says, by 25,000.

The Best Way to Reach California in Upholstered Tourist Cars.

Other lines, jealous of the enviable reputation established by the sixteen years' success of Phillips' California tours, are imitating our methods, in a crude way. Having carried in that time 125,000 passengers, we assume to know how to do it in the most satisfactory manner.

Our cars leave every Thursday evening, via Omaha, Denver and Salt Lake, the famous Scenic Route. Nov. 3 and each Tuesday thereafter we will run an additional car via Kansas City, Fort Worth and El Paso, the true Southern route.

Ticket rates very low. Berth rate through only $6.

Don't be deceived into making arrangements before consulting J. H. Whitaker, City Ticket Agent, Ryan Hotel Block.
