Yes, Hermie Is a Good Boy, Even if He Does Bounce Buns Off the Baker's Dome

But the "Open-Faced" Lad Was in the Policeman's "Little Bad Book," So He Was Lucky to Be Arraigned Before a Magistrate Who Is "a Regular Fellow."

HERMAN ROSENFELD for twelve years had played marbles and thrown balls through store windows in the immediate neighborhood of Essex and Hester Streets. Hermie was an honest, open-faced lad, though possessing a smelling organ closely resembling a question mark. According to little trouble-making books that policemen always carry, Hermie had lived in every street in the east side.

Nevertheless, Hermie was a good lad. His one failing was a natural desire to possess the stock in trade of a small bakery near his home. And right here is where we push another character to the front.

"You say you had a bun on the head?" asked Judge Simpson of Mr. Wolff, a respectable baker who tantalized boys by exhibiting sweet morsels in his showcase.

"Just that, y'honor," replied Mr. Wolff. "I got it on and in the head. Sure, it was young Hermie; that lad there, y'honor. I was after watching him. He grabbed one of my best sugar buns. Three cents, y'honor, I sell them for. With the bun he ran away. I ran too. Before I could catch him, Hermie turned and hurled the bun at my head."

"I surmise from your description of the course the bun took after it departed from the digits of the lad you term 'Hermie' that this contentious sweet morsel suddenly became inert; a limpid mass, after striking your head?" Oh, yes, Judge Simpson is a regular fellow.

"At my feet it fell, y'honor," said Wolff. "For no more could I sell it.

And when I shook Hermie, who should come along but this gentlemen—excuse me, Judge, if I don't use good English—'For why you should shake my little Hermie?' he shouts. 'You should be lucky he receives nothing more than a shaking.' I returned to Mr. Rosenfeld."

"Y' honor," shouted Hermie's father, "I ask you, I should stand by and see this bun purveyor shake little Hermie?"

Officer Cohen of the Children's Society stepped forward at this point. He started to speak. But Hermie, Rosenfeld, Sr., and Mr. Wolff all beat him to it. (Business of flat vowels, irregular verbs and shimmy dancing by three pairs of hands.)

"Discharged," shouted Judge Simpson. "Clear the court."

Accused of Posing as Lieut. Colonel.

A young man who said he was Charles Machese and lived at No. 824 St. Nicholas Avenue was locked up at Police Headquarters last night to await advices from the Army Intelligence Bureau. It was said at Headquarters that he was a Federl prisoner and it was not known there for what the Government wanted him further than that he had posed as a Lieutenant Colonel.

Dies in a Theatre.

Edwin N. Whitfield, a retired attorney, forty-nine years old, of Gainesville, Ala., who lived with his father-in-law, Dr. J. W. Nelson, at No. 159 West 68th Street, died in the Lincoln Square Theatre, No. 1947 Broadway, last night. He had been ill for some time. He was the son of Gen. Francis Whitfield of the Confederate Army.

One Woman to Another

By Marjorie Brett

Elinor Carstairs tapped her foot impatiently, and glanced at her wrist watch in annoyance. Her appointment with Grace was at two o'clock, and it was already 2.15.

At about twenty minutes after two Grace rushed up and kissed her effusively.

"My dear!" she exclaimed, "I'm so sorry, but at the last minute I found that I was all out of Amolin, and I had to send out and get some."

"What in the world is Amolin?" asked Marjorie, her annoyance at Grace's lateness forgotten in her curiosity.

"Why," said Grace hesitatingly, "not so long ago, mother told me that I didn't seem as wholesome and fresh personally as I ought to be."

"I know just how it is," said Elinor sympathetically, "keeping sweet and wholesome is no easy matter. However, what has all this to do with Amolin?"

"Well," continued Grace, "Amolin is a perfectly wonderful deodorant that positively destroys all odor from perspiration or other causes. I use it after my bath, sprinkle it in my clothes, and in fact, use it in all sorts of personal ways."

Amolin is the personal deodorant powder. It is antiseptic, unscented, contains no talcum, and is soothing and healing. Amolin is excellent too, for healing and preventing chafing. It can be bought at any drug or department store for 35c a can, or 45c for a double size tin. Write The Amolin Company, Lodi, N. J., for a free sample.—Advt.
