THE TRIBUNE

ATHANASIA: Second Edition, with Notes and Corrections. Also, Miscellaneous Poems; By the Author of 'Christian Ballads,' &c. (1 vol. pp. 187.) Wiley & Putnam.

Mr. Arthur Cleveland Cox, has written spirited lyrics, and some of his early attempts at epic poetry were very respectable. Some of the imitations of the old English bards first collected in this volume are decidedly happy. He is quite right in his later efforts in making religion the soul and support of his muse; that he is equally happy in the strong infusion of dogmatic Theology, by which his latest writing are colored may not be so generally conceded. For example—the term 'the pearl-drops of salvation,' as applied to baptismal water, read well in a Poem, and would pass without remark; but a note of ten pages thereon, attached to a College exercise, and assuming to prove that Baptim is Regeneration, may possibly be esteemed out of place by some readers.—The volume before us is admirably printed and issued.

☞ 'THE MAGNET,' No. I. by La Roy Sunderland, has just made its appearance. It is devoted to Phrenology and Magnetism, and proposes not merely to set forth and establish the reality of the extraordinary mental phenomena commonly termed Animal Magnetism, but to unfold and illustrate the laws of its being. The number before us is admirably got up, and filled with information with regard to Magnetism in all its admitted and its contested manifestations. We commend it to the regard of the inquiring and the curious. ($2 per annum. 13¾ c. per copy: Office, 133 Fulton-st.)

ANTIQUITIES OF CENTRAL AMERICA.—We passed an hour or two most agreeably, a few days ago, in examining a number of specimens of the antiquities of Central America, collected by our friend Mr. Norman, on his late visit to Yucatan. Mr. N. traveled in the interior of the country and sojourned several days at Tchechuan, with other places never visited by Stephens and Catherwood, and abounding in the most interesting relics of an aboriginal race, as well as in monuments yet undecayed by time, and attesting a people far advanced in civilization. The examples of statuary, sculpture and hieroglyphical engravings which we saw are of the most surprising character.

They are uniformly executed upon an extremely hard stone; and when we remember that not a trace of iron has been discovered in that country, and that these elaborate works have been compassed with instruments not more finished or finer than sharpened stone, our wonder is excited at the hardy and unwearying industry that must have wrought such stupendous labor with such imperfect tools. Mr. Norman's design of the great Temple at Tchechuan, 400 feet in length, and of a variety of mounds and monuments which he discovered almost concealed by masses of tangled and exuberant vegetation, are fraught with the deepest interest to the antiquarian and inquirer. It is his intention, we believe, to send them to one of the Northern museums, in the absence of any public repertory of curiosities in this State.

SUICIDE—Daniel Ford, of De Witt, committed suide on Tuesday, the 24 inst. At the time the fatal deed was committed he was under arrest for theft. While the officer was conveying him to prison he begged the privilege of going to his home, as he said, to obtain some cloths. As soon as he reached home he got his razor, went up stairs and cut his throat. When found he was alive, sitting on the floor and bleeding profusely, but too far gone to be restored by medical aid. He was a man of intemperate habits, and aged about 40 years.

"HOLDING THE WORD OF PROMISE TO THE EAR AND BREAKING IT TO THE HOPE."—This saying was strikingly verified during our last court, in the case of a juror who had absented himself during an inclement day—pleading that, and the distance he had to ride, as an extenuation. And to the very last, he believed the excuse a valid one. The Judge said, "Mr ——, in consideration of the very inclement state of the weather—the great distance you live from the seat of justice—your former punctuality as a juror—and the fact that this is the first case under the new rule laid down by the Court; we say, all these things being duly considered, we fine you only $5!" Up to the time of uttering the words "five dollars," two to one would have been bet upon the release of the juror—all laughed as they were pronounced, except the absentee; who, we are sure, although disappointed at the time, was, after a little reflection, convinced of the justness of the fine.

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL for Young Ladies, by the Misses DEMAREST, No 96 Orange street, corner of Henry, Brooklyn, L. I. The summer term of this Institution will commence on the 11th of May, 1842. This school has been in successful operation for nearly four years. None but experienced and well qualified Teachers are employed, and only a limited number of pupils received.

The course of instruction includes all the branches of an English education, with the Latin, French, and Spanish Languages, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Drawing and Painting.

The service of the Principals is personal and constant, and no exertion is spared to elevate the moral as well as the intellectual attainments of their pupils. One month's notice is required previous to the removal of any scholar.

The price of tuition in the English branches, varies from eight to fifteen dollars per term, according to the studies pursued. Board and English tuition, two hundred dollars per annum. Circulars, stating particulars, obtained at the residence of the Teachers.

ASSOCIATION;

Or, Principles of a True Organization of Society.

OUR EVILS ARE SOCIAL, NOT POLITICAL; AND POLITICAL REFORMS CANNOT REMEDY THEM.

☞ The editorship of this column is distinct from that of The Tribune. Address letters, post-paid, to A. BRISBANE.

Practical Organization of Association.

We commence to-day a description of the practical Organization of Association; and we recommend to those who wish a clear idea of our System to follow the articles, as they will form a consecutive series. We will show how all the advantages which we have represented as arising from Association can be attained;—how Industry can be rendered ATTRACTIVE,—individual Liberty preserved and vastly extended,—and how all occupations which are now repugnant and offensive can be performed, and domestic services rendered without degrading any.

The proper number of persons for an Association is eighteen hundred or two thousand, or, if we suppose from six to seven persons to a family, about three hundred families. This number is not fixed upon arbitrarily, but is based upon the number of different characters which we find in men, and the variety of elements necessary to form Social Harmony. The members should be of all ages and characters, of different degrees of fortune, and should possess varied practical and theoretical knowledge. A Diversity in all these respects should exist; this Diversity, instead of offering an obstacle to Association, is a necessary condition. It would be impossible to associate two thousand persons of the same tastes and characters. True Equality does not consist in Uniformity, but in the harmony of a variety of elements.

A practical trial on a small scale could be made with four hundred persons, or eighty families. This is the smallest number with which Industry can be rendered ATTRACTIVE,—a great variety of occupations, suited to both sexes and to different ages and inclinations, established,—and a choice of sympathetic characters and varied Social relations offered to all. Four hundred, consequently, is the smallest number with which Association—combining the above advantages—can be established.

An Association of thirty or forty families, or two hundred persons, could be organized, which could be made very profitable, and in which the condition of the people could be improved much over what it now is, but it would only be an improvement of the present system. The number is too small to admit of Industry being rendered attractive, and of offering to the members that variety of occupations and company which Man requires. In small Associations, monotony, uniformity and often a constant contact of antipathies or uncongenial characters must exist. In large Associations, there can be variety in every respect, and among a large number of persons, every one can find beings with whom he sympathises, so that it will not be necessary, in order to satisfy his Social nature, to mingle with persons who are not of a congenial character.

We have other and philosophical reasons why Association cannot succeed with a small number of persons, which we will explain later. We will merely say at present that it is with Association as with Music; we cannot have musical harmony with three or four notes, although we can with three or four hundred. So with Association or Social Harmony; with a small number of three or four or ten or twelve families, nothing can be done, while with eighty families, or four hundred persons, success would be easy. In taking certain numbers we do not do so arbitrarily; we have always a reason for it, based upon fixed and natural Laws.

We must not suppose that Association is a new principle, entirely separated from all that exists; every thing in our present Societies is based upon or done by Association. A single family is an Association, but it is the smallest one which can exist, as it is a single couple with their children in a separate house by themselves. A Boarding-House or a Hotel is an Association; a Bank, a Railroad or an Insurance Company is an Association, but more or less imperfect and incomplete. An Army is also an Association,—but for the purpose of carnage and destruction. To avoid entirely the principle of Association, we must suppose an individual living alone in an uninhabited region.

Without Association, Man is weak and miserable; it is only by Association that he becomes powerful and can render himself happy. Our Roads, Bridges, School-Houses, Churches, and most of our Internal Improvements are the work of Association; nothing great and important can be done without it. The principle, therefore, must be admitted as good in itself; but it must be universalized, and made to embrace all interests and a large number of families. An isolated family is like a Bank, an incomplete and imperfect Association.

Small Associations are defective; they are full of waste, discord and monotony. We cannot have harmony without a variety of elements. The isolated family is, as we remarked, the smallest Association that can exist; it is, therefore, the most defective. If we examine the Social life of families—taking rich and poor—we shall find that in four cases out of five there is more or less discord or dissatisfaction, arising either from monotony, from a want of a variety of occupations suited to the tastes of different members, from a constant contact of antipathetic characters, or other causes. If a small Association produces Waste, Discord, Monotony, and offers very little variety of Occupations and Social Relations, it is not evident that large Associations will produce Economy, Harmony and Variety, and throw open to all a multiplicity of pursuits in Art, Science and Industry, and a broad field of Social Relations.

Our present Societies are based upon small Associations or Isolated Families, with separate and opposing interests; they are all in conflict with, and the majority are preying upon, defrauding and overreaching each other. We wish to base Society upon large Associations of two thousand persons, with Harmony of interests, united together in bonds of friendship and good feeling, and striving to promote their mutual welfare and happiness by every means in their power.

For an Association of two thousand persons, a tract of land three miles square, (not three square miles,) containing about six thousand acres, will be necessary. For an Association of four hundred persons, fifteen hundred acres of land will be sufficient. This tract of land would form the domain of the Association: its surface should be undulating, and the soil adapted to a varied cultivation. It should be situated in the vicinity of a large city, (say from ten to twenty miles, or somewhat farther, if on the line of a railroad), which will offer a convenient market for its products.—The first Association being alone, it will have a good many difficulties to contend with: it should therefore be situated near a large city, where various facilities, such as skillful artisans, teachers, good machinery, implements &c. can readily be obtained.

Mr. Hows trusts that the reputation he has sustained during the six years he presided over his late establishment, "The Woodlawn Institute," will render any professions, as to the future unnecessary, further than to assure his friends and the public that the same system of sound practical Education will be continued by him, which it has hitherto been his conscientious endeavor, faithfully to carry into operation. For terms, apply to Mr. Hows, (before the 1st May,) at his residence, 136 Mercer-street.

N. B. Mr. Hows will devote a portion of his leisure time to the Instruction of Adult Classes in ELOCUTION, and to Private Tuition in the same, when such may be preferred. Mr. Hows would especially invite the attention of Theological and Law students to the system he has adopted for instruction in this important branch of a liberal education. It is the aim of Mr. Hows to make the study of this art rather a development of the MIND, than a dry practice of mechanical rules and artificial acquirements.

WRITING and Merchants' Accounts.—The undersigned continues to give instruction in Writing, Book-keeping and Commercial Arithmetic during the day or evening. The lessons may be received entirely in private if desired.

The terms are the same as charged by the advertiser during the last 3 years, viz: $15 for either branch singly until the requisite proficiency is attained.

To obviate further annoyance from useless applications, the advertiser begs to state that he neither proposes to teach writing in a fixed number of lessons, nor to provide situations for his students; and as regards his mode of instruction he deems it sufficient to state, for the information of strangers, what may be easily tested by enquiring among merchants, viz: that there are hundreds of young men filling the duties of responsible and lucrative situations in this city who owe their advancement to the advertiser's instruction.
THOMAS JONES, 185 Broadway.

For sale at the rooms JONES'S BOOK-KEEPING just published and already adopted in the leading Academic institutions in this city. Price $1 50.

HAVING presented to the Public the claims of my first premium Cologne for so long, I now take the liberty of laying before them another article of equal worth, viz: "The Virginia Shaving Cream." This vegetable composition I can safely say is unequaled by any now offered to the American public for the pleasure it affords in shaving. It is not only fragrant, produces a rich and lasting lather, but possesses qualities of so highly soothing and healing a nature, as to raise it far above any rival article. As those who have tried my Cologne have found it to be all that I said, so they who use this Cream will acknowledge that the half of its virtues have not been told.
