THE TRIBUNE

THE BURKEY PAPERS. DIARY AND LETTERS OF MADAM D'ARBLAY. Part I. Philadelphia, Cary & Hart. New-York, Wiley & Putnam.

This is the first of two volumes, printed in very fine style and published at a cheap price. The distinguished character of the authoress, the interest attending the Society amid which she lived and the lively spirit and entertaining character of the work must make it generally acceptable.

☞ THE JACQUERIE, James's last novel, has just been issued in two extra sheets of 'The New World' by J. Winchester. Price 12½ cents. It is a thrilling portrayal of the atrocities attending a rebellion of the French serfs against the nobles in the fourteenth century.

Correspondence of The Tribune.
PHILADELPHIA, Saturday Evening.

Notwithstanding all her previous disasters and sufferings, Philadelphia has rarely if ever been the scene of more actual distress than now. The remark applies rather to the fashionable classes than to the small tradesmen and mechanics; for these last, employing moderate capital, and supplying in most cases only the actual wants of the community, are not in general very deeply affected by the crashing among the banking and other great establishments. In all the last year, slowly and steadily, the old regime—if that appellation may be used in this modern democracie—have been surrendering to the rapacious sheriff and auctioneer their coaches, horses, plate, Wiltons, Saxonies and Brussels, with other luxuries, and quietly withdrawing from the fashionable quarters to streets inhabited by shopkeepers and mechanics, or to the country. Almost every day there are auctions in the palaces of Chestnut and Walnut-streets, and the richest furniture it is said sells for less than half its value. I heard this morning of a case in which one of the 'stock barons' had sold a carriage with horses worth $700 for less than $250. Among the 'retiracies' in prospect I hear of that of Mr. Lippincott, of U. S. Bank notoriety. He has some bank debt to meet, for which he was secured by Mississippi bonds, amounting to more than $150,000. The Bank Assignees can do nothing for him, according to the opinion of Mr. Sergeant and some other eminent lawyers, and for any man in Philadelphia to meet a debt of that magnitude in the next three weeks is not to be thought of. Numerous small failures are spoken of, but they are of no interest save to readers in the city.

Our markets are exceedingly well supplied, and the town never wore a more charming appearance. The numerous public squares are in admirable order—every tree is in full suit of emerald—and every walk graveled and swept with Philadelphia nicety. These places are daily filled with the beauty of the place and the thousands who lack more profitable employment.

In the literary way but little is being done.—M. Hooker has just published Dr. Goode's famous work on Oxford Theology, which bids fair to make more noise than any other religious book printed in the year. Griswold's "Poets and Poetry of America" is said to be the most marketable volume—indeed the only non-professional one in the stores that sells. Our publishers have numerous choice things in readiness for the Fall campaign, among which Mr. E. Joy Morris's Oriental Travels and Researches will be worthy of special notice. Gen. Harlan's book about Afghanistan will will shortly be out, and the Count Bjorst jerna's publications on the same country it is intimated will be roughly handled in it. Mr. Griswold, by the way, I see is engaged by Mr. Graham, the enterprising proprietor of the Magazine which bears his name, as editor of that popular monthly, in place of Mr. Poe, and as an occasional writer for the old "Saturday Evening Post." Though Mr. G. lost a few friends here by leaving out of his "Poets and Poetry" a number of the milk-and-water poetasters in the city, every one is ready to acknowledge his ability, and eminent fitness for the new duties he has assumed. RECTOR.

☞ The FRANKLIN TEMPERANCE SOCIETY held a glorious meeting at the Apollo Saloon on Saturday evening—JAMES HARPER, President, in the Chair. Several animating Addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. SEHON of Cincinnati; Mr. HAMILTON of Albany and several members. Hose Company 19 came in and signed the Pledge, forcibly addressing the Society through Mr. W. G. BOONS, and were welcomed to its fellowship by the President. Capital songs were sung by Mr. MURPHY, the Ladies, and the different Fire Companies present. The large Hall was crowded to the utmost, although several other Temperance Meetings were held the same evening.

☞ ORSAMUS TURNER, the new Regency Canal Collector at Lockport, is in default to the State $623 borrowed from the U. S. Deposite Fund, on property which was worthless. Hon. A. B. Dickinson, in the Senate, tried to have his salary stopped to pay his debt, but his resolution was laid on the table by a party vote.

☞ LOCKPORT, Niagara Co has elected Whig Charter Officers by 75 average majority. So much for stopping the Public Works.

☞ ROME, Oneida Co. has elected Loco-Foco Charter Officers as usual, but with the precaution, now becoming general, of choosing a Whig Collector this time. It is always well to be safe.

WESTERN RAILROAD.—Net receipts for six days, ending Saturday, May 7, for passengers, $4,860; for freight, mail, and Harnden, $5,101 50. Total, $9,961 33.

The 26 working days in April, yielded $36,601.

☞ Monroe County held a strong HOME INDUSTRY CONVENTION at Rochester on the 10th inst. Charles J. Hill (V. B. Mayor of Rochester) presided. An able Address was reported by A. W. Kelsey. Committees were appointed to draft a memorial for the grain-growing States, and to call farther Conventions. The following is among the Resolutions adopted:

Resolved, That the adequate protection of American Agriculture is the first duty of our Government; that to accomplish this object, in the opinion of this Convention, they can be effectually accomplished by such duties on foreign manufactures as shall afford to a portion of our own population a fair remuneration for labor applied to various branches of manufactures, thereby establishing a stable and sure home market for the products of our soil.

☞ The people of St. Mary's Md., celebrated on the 10th the Anniversary of the settlement of the Colony of Maryland under Lord Baltimore. An oration was delivered by GEO. READ, Esq. of Baltimore.

ACCIDENT TO THE ROCHESTER.—The Rochester has been running two or three days with a cracked shaft, and on her way up last night it broke when the boat was near Cold Springs. The passengers were brought up by the Columbia. The Rochester will soon take her place in the line, as a new shaft is really ready.

ASSOCIATION;

Or, Principles of a True Organization of Society.

OUR EVILS ARE SOCIAL, NOT POLITICAL; AND POLITICAL REFORMS CANNOT REMEDY THEM.

Practical Organization of Association.

The proper number of persons for an Association is, as we stated, two thousand, or about three hundred families: a practical trial could be made on a reduced scale with four hundred persons. For a large Association, six thousand acres of land will be necessary; for a small one, fifteen hundred would be sufficient.

The first Association should be located near a large city; if it were established in the Far West, or in a thinly inhabited region, it would have to raise wheat, corn, cotton, hemp, or such products as could be transported to a distance,—the cultivation of which is not easy and attractive, as is the case with fruits, vegetables, flowers, grapevines, &c., and which can only be rendered attractive when a region of country is covered with Associations, and proper emulation and strong incentives can be applied to Industry. The great object is to render Industry attractive, and as the cultivation of fruits, flowers and vegetables and the care of domestic animals are in themselves pleasing and attractive, they should occupy in the first Association the principal part of the time which the members devote to Industry; and for this purpose a good market must be had, which renders the vicinity of a large city necessary.

Several branches of Manufactures and Mechanics must be established, so as to give occupation during rainy days and the winter months; but as they are not so attractive as Agricultural pursuits, they would occupy much less time.

The tract of land necessary for an Association, and which would form its Domain, should lie in a body. This Domain would be to the Association what a little farm now is to an isolated family. The Association would not build three hundred log-houses, cottages or hovels at different points on its Domain, in which they would live isolatedly, according to the present system; they would erect in the centre a commodious and elegant Edifice, which could be made to combine the greatest economies with convenience, and airiness and architectural beauty,—all of which are wanting in our little, isolated tenements. This Edifice would be the Manor-House of the Domain, or the Residence of the Association.

The Association, cultivating its Domain as if it were the property of a single individual, would bring to bear in this important work all the Skill, Science and practical Knowledge of its most experienced members; they would form an Agricultural Council, who would advise as to the general management of the Domain. They would ascertain the different varieties of soils, the best uses to which they could be applied, the proper changes of crops, and every other detail relating to a scientific prosecution of Agriculture.

An Association, being well supplied with abundant Capital, the best of Implements, Machinery, Teams, races of Animals, and other advantages, could cultivate its Domain in the most thorough and beautiful manner. It would lay out its lands in gardens, fields, fruit-orchards, vineyards, lawns and wood-lands, and could embellish the whole as highly and arrange it as tastefully as the parks and gardens of the Noblemen of England. A whole country covered with Associations would offer the most beautiful spectacle that can be conceived,—as beautiful and diversified as it is now in general dreary and monotonous.

What a contrast between such a system of Agriculture and the present mode of farming! That perfect system, that unity of action and interests, which would exist in Association, are entirely banished from our Societies. Three hundred Farmers cultivate separately three hundred little farms, which are surrounded with, and cut up by, an innumerable number of fences, which are as expensive and as ugly as they would in Association be unnecessary; they live isolatedly and lonely in three hundred separate little tenements, which are in every way unfit residences for Man; they have to contend with the greatest disadvantages;—they are almost deprived of Capital, while Commerce, which makes its profits by buying from and selling to them, is supplied with millions; they have poor Implements, inferior Teams, Flocks, &c., and scarcely any economical Machinery. They should be the first to advocate Association, which would elevate them—the cultivators and embellishers of the Globe, the source of national Prosperity and Wealth—to the first rank in Society, whereas at present they are below the Merchant, the Lawyer, the Stock-Jobber, the Politician, and the whole class of Non-Producers, who live upon their Labor and that of other Producing Classes.

"If we compare, in imagination," observes Fourier, "the cultivation of a Domain in Association, overseen like a single farm, with the same extent of country cut up into little farms, and subjected to the caprice of three hundred families, the parallel will be found most glaring.—Here one makes a meadow of a sloping piece of land, which Nature destined to the vine; another sows wheat where grass should grow; a third to avoid burning grain, clears a declivity which the rains will strip of its soil the following year; while a fourth and a fifth manuply the soil in some other way. The three hundred families lose their time and money in barricading themselves against each other, and in lawsuits about boundary lines and petty thefts; they all avoid works of general utility, which might be of advantage to disagreeable neighbors, and individual interest is everywhere brought in conflict with public good.

The civilized world talks of economy and system: what system does it see in this industrial incoherence, this anti-social confusion? How has it happened, that for thirty centuries, it has not been discovered that Association, and not cultivation carried on by isolated families, is the destiny of Man, and that so long as he is ignorant of the theory of domestic Association, he has not attained his destiny!

To appreciate this principle fully, we have only to reflect a moment on the extent of knowledge which Agriculture requires, and the impossibility on the part of the farmer of having a twentieth part of the means necessary to make a perfect agriculturist. To a large capital he should add the knowledge scattered among a hundred scientific and practical men, and, even then, were he to die without a successor of equal talent, what he had done would go to decay and his domain rapidly decline.

It is only in Association, that a combination of capital and talent, as above supposed, is possible; Association, consequently, is the only system, which the Creator could have calculated upon, for, presuming it to be applied to communities of about eighteen hundred inhabitants, there would be found among such a number of persons this mass of knowledge, which would be perpetuated by corporate transmission. A son does not inherit the acquirements of his father; but among a community of eighteen hundred persons, there would be found those apt at acquiring the talent and knowledge of skillful members, whom at some later period they would be called upon to replace. The more we discuss the question of Association, the more we shall be convinced that civilized agriculture, carried on by separate families with conflicting interests, is in complete opposition to the Destiny of Man, and that the great discovery to be made is the secret of associating large assemblages. Small masses do not admit of a perfect system of economies, nor is it possible thus to unite the various kinds of knowledge which perfection in each branch of industry requires."

CRIME AND SUICIDE.—It is seldom we are called upon to record such a melancholy case of crime and its wretched consequences as one which has recently transpired in the neighboring County of Windham. We have refrained from any public notice of the matter until now, because we were desirous of first ascertaining accurately the facts, instead of giving currency to flying rumors which might or might not be true.

On Saturday night the 31st ult. an old gentleman named Elias Mason, long a resident of the town of Woodstock, and one of its most respected and influential citizens, suddenly deceased under circumstances which left no doubt on the mind of his attending physicians that he had taken poison. But wishing to spare the feelings of Mr. Mason's family and friends, the physicians refrained from communicating their convictions as to the cause of Mr. M's sudden death. It was supposed by the family and others to have been a case of apoplexy, and it was so reported abroad. On Tuesday he was buried, and in the funeral discourse, Mr. M's character was held up as a model of excellence—worthy of imitation by all. As a man and a Christian he had, through a long and busy life, maintained an unsullied reputation for integrity and truth, and his death was mourned as a public loss. His business had been of a kind that rendered it necessary to have a good deal to do with the banks; and it was a common remark of the directors of the Thompson Bank that no man who did business there, had as many and as good endorsers as Mr. Mason.

But hardly had the multitude which followed his remains to the grave dispersed, before one who had joined in the procession—a Mr. Carpenter—received a letter from an officer of the Thompson Bank informing him that a note of which he was an endorser and Mr. Mason the drawer, was protested for non payment. This was the second instance in which, within a few weeks, he had received such a notice. The first one awakened his suspicions that Mr. M. had been committing forgery—for he could not remember ever having endorsed such a note for Mr. M. Yet thinking it possible he might be mistaken, he resolved to say nothing about the matter; but when the second notice of protest came, there was no longer room to doubt. He rode to the Bank immediately and satisfied himself by actual inspection, that his name had been forged to the protested paper.—This discovery led the Bank Officers to a general examination of the notes of the deceased, and, as the result, it was found that he had in the Bank about $3,000 of forged paper. Subsequent examinations in the Brooklyn Bank show about $3,000 more of the same kind of paper—in Southbridge Bank $3,000, Chipatchet Bank about $500. How many other Banks have been defrauded in the same way is not yet known.

It is not the Banks, however, that have suffered mainly or most severely. Mr. M. was owing not less than $20,000 in Woodstock—mostly borrowed money—and a large proportion of it borrowed from people of small means, from widows and guardians and persons of that description, whose confidence in the integrity of Mr. M. joined to the general belief of his wealth, led them to regard money placed in his hands as secure as if it were deposited in the Savings Bank. It is now doubtful whether his estate will pay ten cents on the dollar of the claims against it.

For what length of time Mr. M. had carried on these forgeries cannot be accurately known, but there is reason for believing that it was commenced in 1837—a year of unusual embarrassment in business—and it is now said, though we are not informed upon what grounds, that he has carried poison about him for years, evidently resolved, if he should ever be detected, to die the death of a suicide, rather than survive the revelation of his guilt.

It is with reluctance that we give publicity to these facts through our columns; but as they are already circulated widely, and with exaggerations and additions, in many instances, which do not belong to them, we have not felt at liberty to remain silent. [Norwich (Conn.) Cour., May 14.

NECESSITY FOR THE ENLARGEMENT.—The price of freight from Detroit to Montreal is 80 cts. per barrel of flour, $1,12½ per barrel of pork, and 24 cents per bushel of wheat. From Detroit to New-York by way of Buffalo, on flour $1,06; on pork $1,68—by way of Oswego, on flour 94 cts., on pork $1,67.

It is therefore evident that unless greater facilities for transportation, from the lakes to the tide waters of the Hudson shall be afforded, the American forwarders will be compelled to submit to a ruinous competition from their Canadian brethren. For we take it for granted that in the present state of the New-York Canals the rates of transportation cannot be materially lowered. A great diminution of the State revenues will therefore be unavoidable. To prevent such diminution, what other means can be devised than the completion of the Enlargement?—If the Enlargement were completed, the price of freight between Buffalo and Troy could be reduced 25 per cent. This would secure to the Erie canal the Western trade which is now rapidly seeking the St. Lawrence via the Welland canal. And not only so, but it would get back much of the trade which now passes over the Ohio and Pennsylvania works. What are we to think then of the wisdom of the late Loco-Foco Legislature, which has suspended the Enlargement and thus contributed to divert the trade of the West from New-York, Albany and Troy, to Montreal, Quebec and London?

[Troy Whig.

MAN KILLED ON THE BOSTON AND WORCESTER RAILROAD.—We are pained to record another death on the railroad at Worcester. The facts, as we have learned them, are these. The man killed was a painter, and employed at the time upon the Springfield track. At the point where he was at work, the Springfield track and the Boston and Worcester track are parallel and very near together. The Springfield train was backing, and he stepped from the Springfield track on to the other track. Having his attention wholly directed to the movement of the Springfield train, he did not perceive the Boston train, which was at the instant coming in. Before he could clear the track the train struck and passed over him, cutting off one arm and both his legs. He survived but a short time. His name we have not learned.

MUTUAL INSURANCE.—On Dwelling Houses and Furniture only, profits returned to the Assured. THE HOUSEHOLDERS' MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 10 Wall st., for separating the insurance of Dwelling Houses and Furniture from that of Stores and Merchandise.
It is well known that almost all the losses incurred in the business of insurance, are the result of the burning of valuable stores and costly goods.
This increases the expense of insurance to the householder, and may possibly deprive him of the very security for which he pays his premium.
The cash payments or premiums form a fund, which, after paying expenses and losses, is represented by scrip, and is issued to the assured in proportion to the amount of their insurance.
This Company is prepared to insure against loss or damage by fire, Dwelling Houses, Household Furniture and all Household Property ordinarily kept in dwelling houses. Every person insuring with this Company is entitled to one vote for each hundred dollars insured.
