A DOG'S QUEER FRIENDSHIP.

The Animal Deserts His Master for One Whom He Had Defended.

It is often said that a benefit conferred does more to promote friendship than a favor received. If you would cultivate a friendly feeling toward another, do him a kindness; if you would secure his lasting friendship, get him to do you a kindness. There is some truth, at any rate, in this view of the case; and it applies even to dogs, as is shown strikingly by a story related in "Gold, Sport and Coffee-Planting in Mysore," by Mr. R. H. Elliot.

Mr. A. told me that he once wounded a tiger which afterward sprang on him, knocked him down and seized him by the hand and arm. With Mr. A. was a large dog, which at once attacked the tiger, and diverted him from Mr. A. After driving off the dog, the tiger returned to Mr. A., and commenced worrying him, but was again attacked by the dog.

The dog was driven off three or four times, but the tiger was all the while losing strength, and finally died. The dog was uninjured. Now comes the curious part of the story.

The dog, which was not affectionate, belonged to Mr. A.'s brother, and previously had taken no interest in anyone but his master. Now, however, he refused to go home with his master, but stuck closely to the wounded man, and when some carbolic acid, which caused pain, was applied by Mr. A.'s brother to the wound, the dog began to growl and show other signs of displeasure.

He would not allow anyone to come near Mr. A. except his own special servant, and lay under the bed with his nose sticking out, keeping close guard.

When Mr. A. was carried to the doctor, some thirty-five miles away, the dog went, too, and on the doctor's applying carbolic acid and setting the bones, which caused the patient to cry out, the dog at once seized the doctor by the leg.

In about three months Mr. A. was quite cured. After that the dog lost all interest in him, and returned to his master; and if he met Mr. A. by chance merely acknowledged his recognition of him by the faintest wag of his tail.

A year afterward, happening to meet the doctor, whom he had not seen in the meantime, he at once flew at him and seized him by the trousers.

HABITABLE AREA OF CANADA.

Confined to a Narrow Strip Along the Border of the United States.

Some Canadians ostentatiously boast that their colony is of greater area than the republic of the United States, while they quietly ignore the facts that about one-half of their dependency is covered with perpetual or all but perpetual snow and ice, and that no small part of the remainder is but sparsely inhabited or habitable except by Indians and Indian-French half-breeds, who eke out a precarious subsistence by fishing, by the scanty proceeds from slaughtering fur-bearing animals, and on meager government rations. The habitable portion of Canada, says the Springfield Republican, is in general but a very broken and irregular fringe to the northern boundary of the United States; and although the European settlement of the country began nearly 300 years ago, its present population is only about 5,000,000—from the Atlantic to the Pacific—or over 250,000 less than the population of the state of Pennsylvania! Canada to-day consists of but seven provinces. One of these, Prince Edward island, is a little more than one-fifth the area of the little state of Vermont, and another, British Columbia, a sea of mountains—covering some 350,000 square miles—contains less arable land than the comparatively small contiguous state of Washington. The desirable land for tillage in the three small maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward island and New Brunswick is now chiefly occupied by an excellent Scotch-English people, whose number is all but stationary or retrograde. About one-half of what is claimed to be the Province of Quebec is sparsely inhabited by Indians, Canadian-French half-breeds and the hardiest of "habitans." Much of the remainder, on both banks of the River St. Lawrence and on the northeast bank of the Ottawa river, is a good quality of soil, and the greater part of it is now densely populated by Canadian French.

A portion of the province of Quebec, consisting of about 100 townships, called the eastern townships, lying between the parishes south of the St. Lawrence and the northern boundaries of the states of New York, Vermont and New Hampshire, is good general farming land, now in great part occupied by a mixed population composed of "old country" Englishspeaking people, Canadian French and some descendants of the New England royalists of the last century. For many years the English-speaking people have been steadily receding a minority. There are at present but two cities of any considerable size and business importance in the whole of Canada—the one, Montreal, in the province of Quebec, making a population about two-thirds Canadian-French of somewhat over 200,000; and the other, Toronto, the capital of the province of Ontario, with a population (mostly English-speaking) something below 200,000. There are also seven other considerable towns called "cities," ranging from about 25,000 to 60,000 inhabitants; eleven from 5,000 to about 20,000, and nearly twenty-five of from 5,000 to 10,000 each. There are nearly all the towns in Canada from ocean to ocean; and not a few of them are spoken of by the people themselves as being stationary or decaying towns. The St. Lawrence Atlantic ports of Quebec and Montreal are arctic ice-bound about one-half the year.

"Castoria relieves Colic, Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhœa, Eructation, Kills Worms, gives sleep, and promotes digestion, Without injurious medication."

"For several years I have recommended your 'Castoria,' and shall always continue to do so as it has invariably produced beneficial results." EDWIN F. PARDEE, M. D., 125th Street and 7th Ave., New York City.
