THE PURITANS: A Series of Essays, Critical, Moral and Miscellaneous. By JOHN OLDBERG, Esq. In two volumes. Saxton & Miles, 205 Broadway.

That a book made of light, newspaper essays should reach a second edition is at least proof that, whatever may be its merits, it has found admirers. These volumes are understood to be from the pen of Rev. Leonard Withington, an able ancient New-England divine. They are written with easy but polished grace, a nice appreciation of whatever is heart-touching or ridiculous in nature and in society, a deep regard for truth and eloquence of diction not often met in essays of the same character. They are well worth preserving; and we commend them to the favor of our readers.

MEXICO in 1842: A Description of the Country, its Natural and Political Features; with a Sketch of its History brought down to the present year. To which is added an Account of Texas and Yucatan, and of the Santa Fe Expedition. With a Map. (1 vol. 12mo, pp. 296.) C. J. Folsom, 40 Fulton street.

There is much information compressed into this little treatise, which aspires to no merit beyond that of a veritable compilation of facts. Those who are bent on "hunting" with Houston after harvest, should have it by all means; those who feel interest in the result of that hunt will do well to procure it.

LETTERS TO THE YOUNG: By MARIA JANE JEWSBURY. (Third American Edition.) 1 vol. pp. 264. Saxton & Miles, 205 Broadway.

These Letters are essentially Religious in their character, and evince the originality and vigor which characterize all their author's writings.—None can fail to be arrested by their fervency and power, though to some readers the aspect given to Religion by Mrs. Jewsbury will seem more sombre and awful than is either consistent with the highest truth or the most effective winning of souls. The strictures on Scientific Characters are instructive and interesting.

☞ The number of deaths in this city last week was 151; 40 men, 43 women, 43 boys, 30 girls. Of these, 21 died of consumption, 12 of convulsions, 14 of inflammation of the lungs, 8 of scarlet fever, 5 of inflammation of the brain, 7 of dropsy in the head, and 5 of delirium tremens.

A BANK PRESIDENT CONVICTED.—The Cincinnati Gazette says: "Farrington, late President of the Gallipolis Bank, was sometime since convicted and sentenced to the Penitentiary, for forging certain bills of exchange. Owing to some error in the proceedings, the Supreme Court in Bank reversed the sentence, and remanded him back to Gallia county for a new trial. At the term of the Common Pleas just closed, Farrington was put upon his trial upon an indictment for embezzling the funds of the Bank while President. He was President from the 4th to the 23d January, and during that time embezzled some $13,000 of the funds! The jury found him guilty.

STEAM BOAT BEAR HUNT.—The steamboat Corsair arrived last night from Galena, relates a curious incident. In the Ohio river below they espied a large bear swimming the river. The mate and his companions put off in a skiff, with a determination to capture bruin. The gentleman, however, made a very sturdy resistance. At length they fixed a rope around his head, and carried the other end to the steamboat. Then began a pretty little scence. The steamboat proceeded on, and Mr. Bruin followed, ex necessitate. He was soon hauled in, when his first proceeding was to climb the upper deck, and put to flight all the loungers in these regions. The end was he was killed, and proved to be quite a magnificent fellow.

Mons. D. Bonneville's Lecture.

To the Editor of the Tribune:

I am not a little surprised that Mons D. Bonneville, after his signal failures at New-Haven, Albany and other places, in attempting public exhibitions of Magnetism, should call upon our citizens to countenance him in another effort of this kind. And, as was anticipated, at his Lecture last evening his labors were wholly unsuccessful and unsatisfactory.

That I am a believer in Human Magnetism is well known to you Messrs. Editors, but I cannot, and never did, approve of these public exhibitions of its supposed phenomena. They do no good, and generally, as in this case, disgust more than they please. Let the public frown upon them.

ASSOCIATION;

Or, Principles of a True Organization of Society.

OUR EVILS ARE SOCIAL, NOT POLITICAL; AND POLITICAL REFORMS CANNOT REMEDY THEM.

Practical Organization of Association.

THE EDIFICE.

We pointed out briefly in our last article the contrast between Association and the present system of Society. We showed that an Association of two thousand persons, or three hundred families, would not have as at present three hundred separate little farms or workshops, three hundred houses, three hundred kitchens, and three hundred women to do the cooking, but that it would have a fine Domain three miles square, in the centre of which it would erect a commodious and elegant Edifice, combining every advantage of spaciousness, convenience, economy and comfort.

The Real and Personal Estate of the Association,—that is, its Domain, Edifices, Flocks, Manufactories, Implements and other Property would be represented by Stock divided into Shares, as are Bank Capital, Railroads, and often Steamboats and Manufactories. Persons would own Stock according to the amount of Capital which they invested. By this means, individual Property will be maintained.

We will now proceed to describe the Edifice, leaving the explanation of the system of Property for another article.

The Edifice, outhouses, and the distribution of the grounds of an Association, whose Operations and Industry are regulated by concert and combination, must differ very materially from the constructions of our false Societies,—from their isolated dwellings, which are adapted only to families between whom very few Social Relations, and no combination of Action, exist. Instead of the confused mass of small houses, which compose our towns and villages and cover our farms, and which vie with each other in dirt, ugliness and inconvenience, an Association would build a regular Edifice, combining the highest degree of architectural beauty and convenience. The Edifices of Associations will conform, to a great degree, in all countries to one general plan, which Fourier has deduced from certain natural laws and based upon the wants and requirements of Human Nature, but the greatest variety in style and architecture would be adopted, according to the tastes of a people, locality, climate, &c. We will give a general description, supposing the location to be a favorable one. The building will not be a mere square or oblong, as houses of the present order generally are,—for in Association, all uniformity and monotony would be avoided. It will consist of a double row of edifices encircling court-yards, distributed in a centre, wings and sub-wings.

The centre of the Edifice would be reserved for public purposes and occupations; it will contain the Dining-Halls, Council-Rooms, Library, Reading-Rooms, the Exchange, &c. (The Exchange will be a place of meeting, where the inhabitants can discuss their public and private affairs, concert enterprizes, excursions, and transact a variety of business.) In the centre will also be placed the Observatory, Gallery of Fine Arts and Scientific Collections, which later every Association would have. The central buildings would enclose an open space which would form a winter garden and promenade, planted with evergreen trees, and containing the green-houses.

The Edifice would be three stories high, and rest upon a high basement; the kitchens, and halls for various occupations, would be located in the basement.

The Dining-Halls would, as we remarked, be placed in the centre of the Edifice: there should be seven or eight, and of different sizes. Adjoining the large dining-halls must be small dining-rooms for parties or groups, who may wish to eat apart from the large tables. Parties of friends will wish to dine daily by themselves: they can do so in these rooms, where they will be served in the same manner and at the same price as at the large tables. We will explain later the mode of living in Association: we will merely say that people can dine at the public tables,—in the small dining-rooms adjoining, or in their own private apartments, as they wish. The tables will be at different prices, to suit all tastes and desires of economy.

The Manufactories and Workshops would be located in one of the wings, and those of a noisy nature, like carpenters' and braziers', at the extremity of it. Association will avoid by this means a great inconvenience of our cities, where, in almost every street, some tin or black-smith stuns the ears of the families around.

One of the finest arrangements of the Edifice of an Association is its Gallery or Corridor. Around one front of the entire building would wind a spacious and elegant corridor, or an inclosed piazza, which would communicate with all parts of it. The Edifice of a large Association would be, so to say, a town under one roof, and it must have a public avenue, like the street of a town, to enable the inhabitants to go to the public halls, dining-rooms, workshops, library, and to visit each other. It would not have a dusty or muddy street, exposed to the wet and the cold, or the excessive heat of Summer. People now must go out of their warm houses into the cold air; ladies must leave a ball-room and encounter the inclemency of a Winter's night in getting in their carriages and in going to them home. Thousands are carried off by consumption by this single means. Our miserable system of architecture or building sinks thousands upon thousands into an early grave, or afflicts them with innumerable acute and chronic diseases.

Instead of a dusty or muddy street through which people would have to pass to go to the dining-halls, reading-rooms, library, manufactories and other parts of the Edifice, the architects of the Association would run a large gallery or corridor about twenty-four feet wide in the centre and eighteen in the wings around the Edifice: it would pass along the first story and on the top of the basement: it would be, so to say, a spacious hall running the entire length of the building. The roof of the Edifice would project over it, and it would be inclosed within the outside walls. Flights of steps would lead from it to the upper stories. The doors of the private apartments or residences would open upon it, as our outside doors now open upon the street. We will explain in our next article the mode of constructing the private apartments, and show that people can live with their families as retiredly and privately in Association as they now do in their isolated households, at half or quarter the expense and infinitely more comfortably.

People could go from their rooms through the Gallery, which should be handsomely fitted up and warmed in winter and aired in summer, to all parts of the Edifice: they could, in the hight of winter, communicate with the public saloons, banquet halls, manufactories, visit the reading and lecture rooms, and go to balls or parties without knowing whether it rained or stormed, and without being exposed in any way to the inclemency of the weather.

To pass a winter's day in the Edifice of an Association, to visit all parts of it without being incommoded by the cold or having to pass through muddy streets, would be a charm so new that it would disgust people with their isolated household. If the civilized world has not learned, after twenty-five centuries of experience, how to construct healthy and convenient residences, it is not surprising that it has not discovered a true system of Society.

Spirit of the Country or Domestic Market.

Our markets are still rather bare of Vegetables, although some few of the earlier kinds are cheap and plenty. Sixteen barrels of new PEAS arrived here yesterday from Maryland, and sold at $2 50 to $2 75 per bushel. Green CURRANTS are selling at about $2 a bushel; they are very small, the blossoms scarcely off. ASPARAGUS is plenty and sells for $8, $9 and $10 per 100 bunches, each bunch weighing from 2 to 3 lbs. RADISHES are quite abundant and sell at $1 per 100 bunches, and about 8 or 9 to a bunch of about the size of one's little finger. GOOSEBERRIES are scarce and sell readily for $5 to $3 75 per bushel. APPLES $2 50 to $3 50 a barrel, and in demand. POTATOES by the quantity at from 21 to 38 cents a bushel. The are very plenty, and a rise of two or three cents a bushel would bring in large quantities which are holding back in the neighborhood for higher prieces. North River SHAD are not so plenty as they were last week, and are selling at $18 and $20 per 100; Connecticut Shad about $2 per 100 higher. Poultry is not in demand. A small lot of PIGEONS from Albany were selling out by the dozen yesterday at 75 cents. EGGS in quantities from 10 to 11 cents per dozen. CRANBERRIES $5 per barrel. CHESNUTS $1 25 a bushel, and very dull sales. MAPLE SUGAR, in small cakes, sells for retailing at from 8 to 8½ cents per lb. POT CHEESE at $1 50 per 100.

The sales of Genesee have been to a fair extent, at $6 18¾; about 2000 bbls Michigan, mostly at 6 6¾, with some fancy brand, at 6 12½ a 6 18¾. 700 do Ohio via N Orleans at 5 37½, and 2 a 300 Troy at 6 12½ a 6 18¾. Northern Rye continues steady at 60 cents, at which 2100 bushels have been disposed of, leaving little or none in first hands. Barley is out of season. The demand for Northern Oats continues good, mostly for city use, and prices have further slightly improved: 4,500 bushels were sold yesterday at 43½ cents—we quote 43 a 44½ cts. for large and small parcels: Jersey and Southern are scarce, but the inquiry for these is very moderate. HONEY—An invoice of 5 hhds. 64 tcs. and 62 bbls. Cuba has been taken for export at 50 cents, cash short price; and another of 20 tcs for home use at 60 cents, 4 mons. The market is now bare.

IRON—Since our last, 700 tons approved brands Scotch No. 1 Pig, afloat, have been disposed of at prices ranging from $24 to $25 50, 6 mos.

MOLASSES—Porto Rico is plenty and dull, but New-Orleans and most other descriptions are in fair request. There has been less firmness among the holders of English Linseed, and sales of about 5000 gallons have been made, part from the vessel, at 85 a 87, 6 months; 5000 gallons best American sold in lots within the same range. We understand the last sale of Crude Sperm here was at 67 cents, cash: 35 quarter casks Olive sold at 90 cents, and a few pipes at 85, both 6 months. No. 1 Nutmegs, 75, all 6 mos.

SPIRITS—The expectation of a heavy duty being laid upon Brandy, &c., at the present session of Congress, has given holders of all Foreign Spirits increased confidence, and many of them now require a material advance on former rates, or have withdrawn their stocks from the market entirely.
