CALIFORNIA MAN FARTHEST NORTH IN ALASKA

Adventurer of Pasadena Passes Previous Limits of White Man's Quest; Finds Two Lakes in Frozen District.

Pasadena, Oct. 18.—Uncle Sam came into possession of several hundred miles of coast recently according to a letter received here yesterday from Ernest De Koven Lefingwell by his father, C. W. Lefingwell of San Rafael Heights, from Flaxman Island, Alaska, where the young explorer is now located, on his third exploring expedition in the north. Two large lakes and a big mountain range have been placed on the Alaskan map by Mr. Lefingwell.

In the letter home the explorer stated that he is now mapping out the new territory along the coast at the rate of from thirty to fifty miles per day. His letter was from Point Barrow, the farthest point north on the present Alaskan map. His discoveries lie somewhat between Point Barrow, eastward toward Martin Point and Mackenzie Bay.

Several weeks ago while on an expedition southeast from Point Barrow, several hundred miles to the inland, he discovered lakes that will make a material change in future maps of Alaska. It states that the lakes are very large. On this same expedition he explored a new range of mountains lying between the Romanzoff range and the northern coast.

Mr. Lefingwell now holds a place among the most famous of Alaskan explorers. The present trip is the third he has taken. The two former expeditions were financed by other people. He is now working independently for the purpose of making a new map of northern Alaska.

His first trip to the Arctic regions was made as a member of the Baldwin-Zeigler party. On this trip he made himself famous by discoveries that pale before his present achievements. On his second trip he was accompanied by Elmer Vichelson, the well known Danish naval officer and explorer. Much was accomplished on this expedition and it was then that Lefingwell decided on a later trip.

He started from Pasadena in the spring of 1909. His intentions were to return this winter, but he will remain another year in Alaska, probably returning here during the first part of 1913.

Besides the news of discovery the explorer told his father of many exciting experiences. He has found some rare fossils. He tells of sudden rise in temperature when the thermometer registered 43 degrees above zero at one time and within twenty four hours dropped to 50 degrees below the mark. He tells also of an attack made on the Fort McPehrson police by Indians. Six of the mounted police were killed.

His trips along the coast are being made in his ship Argo, fitted up in Los Angeles harbor in 1909. He intends to make the return trip in this little vessel.

SUDDEN DISASTER AND CONSTANT DISEASE

The nation has been shocked by another appalling disaster, this time in Pennsylvania. A dam, built across a narrow gap between two hills to hold back a vast volume of water, suddenly gave way. The flood poured down the valley, carrying death and destruction with it. About 40 lives were lost in a few minutes. A wave of sympathy swept over the country. Red Cross physicians and nurses hastened to the scene, food, clothing, hospital supplies and money poured into the death-swept valley. Special trains loaded with supplies and men started for the town almost as soon as the news of the disaster was received. The state of Pennsylvania and the entire nation, if necessary, stood ready to relieve suffering and to save life, without regard to the cost in labor or money. All this is right, nor should it be otherwise, says the Journal of the American Medical association. Yet how strange that our sympathies should be aroused to immediate and purposeful action by the loss of 40 lives in a sudden and unusual way, when we are callous and indifferent to the fate of thousands who die from preventable but familiar causes. A Johnstown flood, an Iroquois fire, a San Francisco earthquake, will convulse the world with horror, yet the death from preventable diseases of over 600,000 people in the United States each year excites little interest. The newspapers announce the Austin disaster with front page stories and enormous headlines; yet the United States census report for 1908 (the last one available) shows that in that year in Pennsylvania alone 2,450 people died of typhoid, 1,920 of diphtheria, 8,703 of tuberculosis and that 9,026 infants under two years of age died of infantile diarrhoea, a total mortality of 22,099 from only four preventable diseases in only one state. So accustomed are we to these enormous losses through familiar diseases that we accept them as a matter of course and as the inevitable lot of mankind. Yet each of these diseases is as preventable as was the Austin flood.

Rector (concluding discussion with confirmed pessimist)—Well, you had an early harvest, anyway. Confirmed Pessimist (grudgingly)—Y-e-s; but look wot a tangible long winter it'll make.—Punch.

ANTIFAT AND SOCIETY WOMEN.

Under the heading "Antifat Drug a Peril," an eastern newspaper prints the following special from Newport, R. I.: "Every now and then it is reported that a Washington, New York, Philadelphia, Boston or western woman, who has been a shining light in society here, is in bad health, and it is the proper thing to say she has broken down under the strain of her social duties. But it became known today that the poor health of some women who have broken down here has been caused by the use of a dangerous antifat drug, with which fashionable women in Europe first experimented. Women in Newport have been using this drug ever since fashion decreed that a thin figure must be slender."

The "antifat" drug which the ladies of this aristocratic resort have been using is probably one supplied by some mail order quacks, the main ingredient of which is thyroid. This drug is effective as a fat reducer but like most effective drugs it has its dangerous side. A few years ago when Germany placed strict restrictions on the sale of thyroid it was common gossip that this action was due to the fact that some of the first ladies of that country had had an experience similar to that reported from Newport.

Thyroid is used more extensively as an antifat than for any other purpose. Its use is accompanied by a certain amount of danger, according to the Journal of the American Medical association. In most cases of obesity treatment by thyroid is essentially illogical and treatment by diet and exercise is the logical method. Patients should be warned that the fat will promptly return after the thyroid treatment unless they learn to regulate their diet and exercise, and emphasis should be laid on the fact that in almost every case the obesity is due simply to overeating or to lack of exercise or to a combination of these.
