ANTI-NOISE LEADER.

Even Paris Admires Mrs. Rice and Yearns For War Help.

Three years ago Mrs. Rice of New York city started an aggressive campaign to quell the excessive noises of urban life, and she is at present president of the association incorporated since then under the name of the Society For the Suppression of Excessive Noise. A tour of Europe has convinced her that in this matter, as in so many others, the people of America are far ahead of the rest of the world.

With the exception of a branch society in London, up to the time of the establishment of her society there was no association in existence with a similar object, so far as she could learn. People in Europe were interested in her work, and some of them, inclined to be critical at first, are now studying the subject with the intent of following her lead.

One of the most ardent admirers of her anti-noise campaign is the German writer, Professor Theodor Lessing, who has published a book entitled "Larm" ("Noise"). He has shown his interest in a practical way and has established in Munich a similar society, which had its first meeting not long ago. He invited Mrs. Rice to become its president and was greatly disappointed that her work in New York will prevent her accepting.

MRS. ISAAC L. RICE

The officials of the city of Rotterdam are discussing the establishment of a similar organization, and the newspapers devoted columns of description and praise to her work while she was there.

When Mrs. Rice reached Paris she found that the fame of the anti-noise society had long preceded her. Journalists visited her and were enthusiastic to the point of hysteria over her idea. One newspaper writer apostrophized her.

"When you have finished calming the American hotels come to us, come to Paris, for we have need of your aid. In Paris the tumult rises day by day. Come, oh, come! You will obtain from our authorities permission to suppress almost everything else, the use of the strings of clanging bells which disfigure the necks of the cab horses. The sound of those bells is rendering us gradually foolish, idiots, morons. By and by we shall all be in asylums. Think of that, Mrs. Isaac L. Rice! Think of that and hurry up! We simply cannot wait, for it is absolutely true that if the present uproar continues much longer Paris itself will be only a great hospital!"

Mrs. Rice brought back in her trunk a few strings of the cab horse bells, which she rang as an accompaniment while she laughingly translated the appeal.

A Professor's Viewpoint.

The last contribution to woman vivisection is from Professor W. I. Thomas of Chicago university. In a number of the American Magazine the author of "Sex and Society," after giving an excellent resume of the evolution of the human animal from the standpoint of the biologist and the anthropologist, indulges, as is now customary, in the unmerciful and not uniformly logical dissecting of modern man's mate. Although a certain degree of scientific fairness is dealt her both in the author's premises and in his conclusion, and he at least concedes that woman is the same animal as man, he nevertheless deals with modern woman much after the manner of his predecessors.

For instance, he accuses her of cunning and hypocrisy (would not these qualities in man have become shrewdness and diplomacy?), of vanity applied to her wooing instincts, although he frankly admits that "she is less interested in man than man is in her." This, however, does not prevent his declaring that "her purity, constancy, reserve and devotion," which constitute "her morality," have been imposed upon her by man whom the latter pleases. Yet can it be denied that when woman breaks through her moral self restraint it is usually due to what the learned professor is pleased to call man's "interest in her?" Is he not a little "mixed" as to the quality and origin of woman's morality?

At least unlike his predecessors, Professor Thomas seeks a remedy for the "irregularity, pettiness, ill health and unserviceableness of modern woman," and he finds it not only in a general and cultural education, but in "a special and occupational interest * * * which should be preferably gainful." This, he thinks, would relieve the matrimonial situation by putting a curb on wives' demands upon their husbands' attentions and must provide a more solid basis of association by bringing women in the same general world of interest as men.

On this ground Professor Thomas, who, by the way, says many equally wise things and a few less so, will no doubt be met by most earnest modern women. The important point for the progress and happiness of society at the present juncture is that women and men shall stand together and understand each other, for, as the book of Genesis says, "God created man * * * and male and female he created them"—that is, they are one.

A Famous Physician's Advice.

There is a famous physician who has given much of his time to the study of rest. He has worked out some good plans for tired men and women which have benefited them.

This doctor says that plenty of fresh air day and night and one hour's walk is enough for any woman. Her constitution does not need any more exercise than is given by a three mile spin. If she is in the city she cannot go at such a rate of speed, but on springy country roads she can turn out from two to three miles a day and find herself in fit condition.

This is the only exercise, he thinks, that does not exhaust the heart, irritate the nerves and overwork the muscles. He does not object to light tennis, indifferently played, but tennis as the American girl plays it is simply out of the question. She wants to play like a man, and she plays against men. She plays too long, and the cold shower bath which she takes at the end is too serious a shock. This doctor has a good deal to say on the subject of annual vacations. He now has his hands full of sick and fatigued women who have overdone the vacation theory.

They work for ten months in a year in some way, whether for wages or not, without giving themselves any rest, then lump their rest all in a few weeks or less during the summer.

They do unaccustomed things which exhaust a body already tired and come back home generally until for the winter.

To quote him, he says: "Nine out of ten women feel worse after a vacation than when they started and are unable to resume work properly. A woman does not need a long rest, but a great number of short ones.

"It is better to rest four separate half hours a day than to go like mad through the week and rest sixteen hours on Sunday. It is better to divide the twelve months of work into stated half holidays rather than take two months after ten months of exhaustion."

An Odd Inducement.

A little boy sat bellowing and roaring with toothache on his nurse's lap.

"Do have it out, Master Bobby!" the nurse kept pleading. "It won't hurt, and then all the ache will be over."

But Bobby, unheeding, continued to bellow and roar.

"Do have it out!" the nurse repeated.

Bobby shook his head and roared on. His brother, a year older, looked up from the block house he was building, distracted for the nonce by the loud cries of distress that resounded through the room, and as he returned to his blocks again said encouragingly:

"Yes, have it out, Bob. It will be one less to cut when you know."—San Antonio Express.
