For The Tribune.

O, WHERE SHALL OUR WAKING BE?

O, WHERE shall our waking be?
And Thought springs up to some radiant star,
That pours its mild glory o'er worlds afar,
Longing to merge in its being of light
All rapturous dreams of the blissful and bright—
The ideal beauty, whose fitful gleams
Come to us ever in trances and dreams.

O, where shall our waking be?
And Love looks forth with her passionate eyes
And questioning glance, to the glowing skies
Of the dreamy West, for some isle of bliss
With its crystal lakes that the South winds kiss,
With balmier airs and heavenlier light,
Where the loved and loving make all things bright.

O, where shall our waking be?
But Faith kneeleth calmly, with meek hands prest
Peacefully over her passionless breast,
And her blue eyes raised to their native Heaven,
Holy and bright as the planet of even—
Tranquil and blest, for earth's chilliest sod,
Is warm to her heart, with the smile of God!

O, where shall our waking be?
Aye! upward, still upward Man's heart doth look,
With yearnings unstated, that cannot brook
The chill world's dallance, but struggle through ill,
Their earnest gaze fixed on that bright gold still,
Uncrushed and unchilled though by mountains oppressed,
Gazing afar to their sweet place of rest!

Deerfield, Mass. July 30, 1845. E. A. P.

The Crops.

The following is a summary of the information we have gathered from our exchanges respecting the Crops in various parts of the country.

In most parts of New England the drouth has been very severe. In the neighborhood of Boston, before the late rains, the fields looked scar and blasted. In some instances unripe Corn has been cut up to feed the cattle. —The Waterbury (Conn.) American says it has no recollection of witnessing such a deeply-penetrating, scathing drouth, as prevails in that vicinity. Large streams in ordinary times, are now literally dried up—water wheels are at a stand—mills and factories deserted—wells are 'broken at the fountain'—and cattle are driven miles for their daily supply of necessary drink. The hay crop has been shorn of its usual proportions—potatoes are stifled—and Indian Corn ruined past recovery—while gardens have long since ceased to be talked about. The late rains have probably put a new face upon vegetation, but the Crops must still be very light.

In the Western part of New-York things look better. The Cattaraugus Whig says that 'the Crops in that and Allegany Counties never looked better than the present season.' The Allegany Advocate says: "The earth groans under the burthen of the products of the season. The toil of the husbandman has been abundantly rewarded, and all hearts should be raised in gratitude to the Giver of our every blessing."

On the Western Reserve, (Ohio) according to the Cleveland Herald of the 19th, the drouth continues with unabated severity, and the grasshoppers have done much injury. In portions of Summit, and most if not all of Portage county, the earth remains unmoistened, the fields presenting a bare and quite desolate appearance.—In some sections of Portage myriads of grasshoppers have stripped the field of every thing green, even to leaves from Apple orchards, and the bark from currant bushes. Oats, Potatoes, Corn and Grass, have suffered alike from their mischievous depredations. Such is the scarcity of fodder and the bad prospect for wintering cattle, that some of the best and most extensive dairy farmers are disposing of their choice stocks of Cows at from $5 to $6 per head. Others are clubbing together and making arrangements for wintering their stock abroad, and others contemplate purchasing Corn in the Southern valleys of the State to carry them through the coming winter.

In Northern Wisconsin, as we learn from the Green Bay Republican, the Crops—particularly Wheat, Corn, Oats and Barley—are better than ever before known. The Wheat is heavy, and entirely free from either smut or rust. The corn is very heavy; Grass and Potatoes, however, are almost an entire failure, in consequence of the unprecedented hot, dry weather. It is feared that, if a long winter should ensue, the cattle will fare hard in Calumut and a portion of Fond du Lac counties. Whole fields of Timothy and Clover are not worth cutting. Wild Prairie Hay is much better.

In Maryland the Wheat crop has not only been an abundant one as to quantity, but is likewise remarkable for the excellence of its quality. In the valley of the Susquehanna the products of numerous farms have been found to weigh sixty-eight pounds per bushel. In Frederick county, Md. the crop of one farm recently sold to a miller, weighed 68 to 69 pounds per bushel.

In Virginia, says the Richmond Whig, "while particular counties and neighborhoods will fall short of an adequate supply of Corn, the aggregate crop in the State, in conjunction with large supplies of the old crop which still remain on hand, especially below tidewater, will not only be ample for home consumption, but yield a large surplus for coast transportation. West of the Blue Ridge, and East of the falls of the Rivers, the Corn crop is believed to be an average one. In many of the Midland counties it will fall short. The wonder is that so much should have been made in defiance of so unprecedented a drouth. It speaks well for the improved methods of cultivation. Twenty years ago such a drouth would scarcely have allowed seed-corn to be raised."

In South Carolina and Georgia the prospect is gloomy. A correspondent writes to the Charleston Mercury from the Warm Springs in Meriwether Co. Ga. as follows:

"The provision crop will fall short fully two-thirds, and so far as we had the means of obtaining information, the opinion was that the whole upper country is in about the same condition. The surplus of the old crop in Rutherford, Henderson and Buncombe, N. C. is in a great degree already exhausted by the demand from this State. Our people are already sending their wagons into Tennessee for Corn thereby necessarily enhancing its price to ruinous rates, and utterly placing it out of the power of the poorer laboring classes to obtain bread. Many of this class are already living by the charity which has not yet quite failed—but which must fail if relief from some quarter is not afforded them. The monied resources of the upper country are so near dried up that the capital is not among us to relieve our people. It is true they are emigrating in droves, yet charity cannot sustain the balance. It will be impossible for your readers to realize the excitement now prevailing amongst all classes, or to credit without plenary proof the lamentable condition of the farming interest. The crop that is now making is almost exclusively confined to the bottom lands—the upland in many places is so total a failure that many are cutting down their fields to save the stalks for fodder. There are hundreds of acres that will not make the seed planted. I know men, who in ordinary times are called "good livers," that will not make as many pecks as they usually make barrels of Corn. Men speak with fear and trembling of the prospect before them—and those who have Corn feel and know they will not long be better off than those who have none. Starving men never have been controlled by reason or the law, and we have no right to hope they will be.

"With the well ascertained fact of the failure in the provision crop, and in view of the inevitable consequences which a short time will develope—the men of property, the tax-payers, have come to the almost unanimous conclusion that it is the duty of the State to interpose its shield of protection against the threatened calamity, in favor of its suffering children. Spartanburgh has adopted the general principle of "relief to the people," and invited her co-sufferers to an expression of opinion and a prompt cooperation in the means of carrying out the principle."

The Cotton crop in these States is not so bad, but is generally very short.

In Florida and Alabama the crops are generally no better than they are in Georgia.

In Mississippi, or at least in the North-eastern part of the State, reports lead to the belief that Cotton has been much injured by the drouth. From the Southern parts of the State accounts are more favorable.

In Louisiana the Cotton crop is likely to prove as good if not better than usual.
