FOOTBALL IS ANCIENT.

It Was Played In England Long Before Cricket Was Known.

Football is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, of our sports. Football is ingrained in human nature. It may be reformed; it can't be abolished.

The ancients inflated a bladder, or follis, and kicked it about. In Greece there was the episkuros, a game played in much the same way as with us, only by a large number of persons. Then the Romans played a game called harpastum with both hands and feet, which shows that even then carrying the ball was permitted. Here were the foundations of socker and Rugby.

There can be little doubt that it was passed on to Great Britain by the Romans from harpastum, where they strove by a "conquering cast" to throw the follis into each other's goal. Centuries before cricket was born in the south of England football was common in the north. Tradition has it that one of the early footballs was the skull of a Danish invader kicked about on the Roodee at Chester on Shrove Tuesday just before Lent.

Whole townships engaged in the game in those days. Sometimes the goals were the towns themselves and the game lasted all day. "Over hilles, dales, hedges, ditches, yea and thorow bushes, briars, mires, plashes and rivers whatsoever you shall sometimes see twenty or thirty lie struggling together in the water, scrambling and scratching for the ball," says one old writer.

As early as 1175 Fitzstephens' "History of London" says that the game was a great Shrove Tuesday sport—"football day." The next time we see football in history it is Latinized in the law as pila pedina and Edward III., the first President Eliot or Butler, is trying to abolish it in 1365. Richard II. tried it again in 1388. Three other kings, besides both the Scotch and English parliaments, attempted the same thing, but it kept its vitality in spite of all. Indeed, the history of football seems to be an endless repetition of this story of opposition. But in the end it usually takes root and is more tenacious than any other sport.—Outing.

A South Arabian Food Plant.

Jowari, a tell, slender plant resembling corn and headed with a grain something like millet, is the Abdali's chief crop. He feeds the stalks to his camels and eats the grain himself. Three crops a year are produced. Jowari requires little cultivation except weeding, which the Abdali does by hand, and when ripe he cuts it off close to the ground with his hunting knife. New shoots spring up from the roots to become the next crop. For a camel load of about 125 pounds he receives at Aden an average of 2 rupees, or $64.88. A fair yearly yield is twenty camel loads an acre. —Consular and Trade Reports.

Time Hung Heavy on His Hands.

A Chinese laundryman recently had his troubles with a watch that habitually lost time. So he took the timepiece to the nearest watchmaker.

"Watchee no good to Charlie Lee," said he briefly, pushing it across the counter. "You fixee him, eh?"

"Certainly," said the watchmaker. "What seems to be the trouble with it?"

"Oh, him too muchee by 'n' by," said Charlie Lee.—Harper's Weekly.
