THE INNER LIFE.

BY J. H. LLOYD.

The Outward World that round us lies
Is not the world in which we dwell;
The Inner World alone is real—
The world we neither buy nor sell.
I am master of all outward things;
Within my soul I take my seat,
And Nature comes in perfumed robes
And lays her treasures at my feet.
All things I have within myself;
Suns set and suns within me rise;
I live within bright palace walls,
Arched o'er by lovely jewel'd skies;
I come and go, a wandering bee
That roams each flowery-scented field,
And treasures up the golden fruit
My daily thoughts and pastimes yield.
I look at things not as they seem;
In all I see the Father's face;
All Nature is a part of Him—
The bending sky is His embrace,
His breath embalms the dewy flowers,
He makes the sun his triumph car,
His voice I hear in every breeze,
His smile I see in every star;
He builds his altar everywhere,
On every heart His dews distill,
His Heaven is with the pure in heart,
Its temple-gates the human will.
I turn away from beaten paths
Where trade and politics deceive,
And love to roam each wood and glen,
And feel my breast with rapture heave;
The world wants not that which I have,
But still I love the Inner Life,
And nought can tempt my heart away
To mingle with its scenes of strife;
For deep within I have a vein
More rich than gold that veins the earth,
And deep within are loving thoughts
That give to joy and trust their birth;
That Inner World, O be it mine,
And mine to tread each sacred hall,
To enter in its silent courts
And know the perfect Soul of All.

Lecture on Phrenology.

A Lecture on the above Science was delivered before the Young Men's Debating Society, at their hall, 111 Bowery, on Thursday evening, by Mr. L. N. Fowler. Long before the appointed hour the fame of the Lecturer had crowded the hall to repletion. Ladies, whose bright smiles diffused a glow of animation upon the proceedings of the meeting, were present in great numbers. After the regular business of the meeting had been dispensed with, Mr. Fowler was introduced to the audience, and proceeded to address them in substance as follows:

In the proper self-government of Man, there is one principle which stands preeminent above all others—it is Self-Knowledge; that acquaintance with ourselves which is necessary in our daily walks through life. By the knowledge of those attributes with which the Creator has endowed us, we should each be led to that sphere of life to which our organizations and characters are most adapted. The evidences of our inclination toward a certain occupation should be scrupulously attended to; for by a perfect observance and a strict regard to our peculiar qualifications we will be better enabled to perform the duties of the different vocations assigned us. A devoted attention to this principle cannot be otherwise than productive of harmony and order in the various circles of society; it gives us a perfect acquaintance with our interior existence or mind, and teaches us to repress our evil tendencies and cultivate our moral qualities. Neglecting the designs of our being we are led to adopt a mode of life ill suited to our abilities or peculiar characteristics, and discover when too late the fatal error which an abuse of judgment or the folly of misdirected ambition has led us to commit.—Many in high public stations have reason to regret this disregard of their destiny. Favored by circumstances they climb to wealth and power, which position having attained, they are disqualified to sustain. To obviate this evil should be the duty of all young men. Do not allow yourselves to be deluded by fancy or led astray by an undue estimate of self, but rather let your first care be to acquire a clear insight to your own mind, unbiassed by self-love or thwarted by diffidence, and then direct your energies to that occupation which is best suited to your characters. Mr. Fowler here referred to drawings of celebrated men, whose faculties he descanted upon at large. Peter the Hermit, Charles XII and those whose great intellects had guided nations and swayed the destinies of continents. The opposite extremes of human nature were also illustrated by portraits and anecdotes. One he mentioned as having an intimate acquaintance with whose self-esteem predominated, and whose consequent foolishness led him to indulge in displays of egotism, which rendered him an object of ridicule and contempt, for, having enlightened you as to his great abilities, he would conclude by asking a loan of sixpence to purchase his dinner.—Phrenology teaches us the character of ourselves and of others with whom we come in contact. It is a science the proper study of which expands the mind, gives play to the reason and cultivates the intellect; its object is not so much an indulgence in theory as a science of practical utility, and the tests to which it has been subjected are sufficient to clear the mind of the skeptic and overthrow all surmises or doubts in its veracity. I would tender you an advice, said Mr. Fowler, in conclusion, young Gentlemen, that you may profit by; let the energies of your mind be directed toward the attainment of those qualities which will give a steadiness to character and vigor to intellect, which will develop the mental faculties and strengthen the moral feelings. And you, young Ladies, who I may truly say control the destinies of your country in the instruction of Youth, forget not the noble trust reposed in you; infuse into the minds of the young those sublime principles by which the Prosperity and Liberty of our country can alone be insured; let the influence you possess over Man be for his good and the glory of his Maker; watch over him like guardian angels, and when affliction bows down his head and grieves his spirit, do you minister to his wants and console him in his sorrow. By so doing you will indeed fulfill the heavenly designs of your being.

Mr. Fowler concluded his remarks amid demonstrations of applause and universal satisfaction. After the delivery of recitations by some of the members, the meeting adjourned and the audience parted highly gratified with the proceedings of the evening.

GREAT FIRE IN NASHVILLE, N. H.—The town of Nashville, N. H. was the scene, this morning, of a destructive conflagration. At 5 o'clock, the large house on the Main st known as the "Central Building," was discovered to be on fire and to be totally destroyed. It was occupied by the Nashua Telegraph Office. This is the third time that Mr. Beard, its Editor and Proprietor, has been burned out. He was partially insured. Also occupied by J. L. Doty for boots and shoes; N. Tuttle & Co. for clothing, and by several milliners. The upper part was occupied by a number of families, who had a narrow escape for their lives and lost most of their furniture. The destruction of property in this building was very great.

From this building the fire extended to the Baptist Church, (Rev. Mr. Pratt's) which was burnt to the ground. The basement story was occupied H. F. Converse, as a dry goods store, and Aaron Haywood, for hardware. The goods in these stores were mostly saved. The fire extended up the south side of Franklin st and burnt the dwelling-house and dye-house of Moses Wood. On the east side of Main st. a store owned by the Nashua and Wilton Railroad Company was burnt. It was occupied by S. D. Abbott, as a furniture store, and T. Gay & Sons for groceries, hardware and dry goods. Latter insured for $2,000—loss greater.

A building at the west end of the railroad dépôt was also destroyed. It was occupied by J. Shattuck for West India goods and iron, insured by I. Bagley, provision dealer, by J. Kempton, confectioner, and by a hair dresser, and tin worker.

The origin of the fire is not known. It is attributed to incendiaries. It was finally checked by a fire-proof wall. The bridge across the river which divides Nashua from Nashville was considerably damaged, and also the roofs of several houses upon the Nashua side. A high wind would have caused a much greater destruction of property.

The loss is estimated at $50,000—about one-third of which is insured. We are indebted to Mr. Whitney of the Nashua Express and others for the above particulars.

MORSE'S AIR DISTRIBUTOR, for burning sawdust, tan, turning chips or other fine fuel, for running steam-engines. This recent invention, patented by Morse & Brothers, consists in distributing the air through the fine fuel by means of perforated cones, is both simple and much more durable than the ordinary grate, and is placed in the same fire-place with trifling alteration. A number of steam sawmills in Niagara and Erie Counties, are consuming all their sawdust, bark and chips, in lieu of wood or slabs. One in Lockport with two engines of sixty horse power, driven entirely with sawdust, bark and chips from the edgings of ship planks, without wood or slabs. In Buffalo two extensive tanneries, viz. Palmer's and N. Case & Co's use no other fuel than wet tan, to run their engines. It is found also that steam is got up quicker with sawdust or tan with these grates, than with wood on the ordinary grate.

☞ The saving is a very great one, to say nothing of the convenience. Price $15.

The undersigned has the exclusive right to manufacture, use and vend "Morse's Air Distributor, in the State of New-York, to whom application may be made, or for other States to him or to Morse & Brothers, Athol, Massachusetts.

ON MONDAY NEXT

WILL BE PUBLISHED—The First Book in French, or a Practical Introduction to the Reading, Writing and Speaking the French Language. By Norman Pinny, A M. This book is more simple and easy for beginners in French than any heretofore published on the new method. While it is designed to make the method more available to young or classes, it is believed that beginners generally will find their progress greater, and the study more agreeable, by commencing with this little book. Those also who wish to acquire an ability to use the language sufficiently for practical purposes, in a very short time will undoubtedly find this work the best suited to their purpose.
