

IMPROVEMENTS AT THE DEPOT

BETTER SERVICE TO TRAVELERS IS TO BE RESULT OF WORK NOW UNDER WAY.

The Union Pacific is paving a strip of way between the second and third tracks in front of the depot, so that passengers from trains going west, and those taking the branch trains, may have solid footing in bad weather. This strip is being paved with brick on a concrete base. A total of five hundred thirty feet in length is being laid at present with three lamp posts at regular intervals down the center.

This will enable a train from the west to discharge its passengers and express on the regular platform at the same time that a train from the east is handling its passengers and baggage on the new platform. Frequent congestion at the depot and in yards has been caused by inability to handle more than one train at a time at the depot.

While the plans do not show that immediate construction will begin, it is said by the railroad men that blueprints are being shown which show extensive sheds over these tracks, which sheds are expected to protect passengers and trainmen from rain and snow. These plans are also said to show an iron fence around the platform, similar to those in most cities. Rumor says that engineers have made preliminary surveys of an underground passage from the depot to the north side of the second track. This passage would be used by passengers arriving or departing on west bound trains. One thing is certain and that is that the officials of the Union Pacific are going to make improvements in the service as fast as the traffic at this terminal will warrant the expenditure.
