EXAMINING COMMITTEES' REPORTS—The Committee of Examination in the Mathematical Department of the Poughkeepsie Collegiate School, respectfully report:

That they have attended to the examination of eight classes in this department; two in Arithmetic, three in Algebra, two in Geometry, and one in Surveying. The whole number of pupils in this department are 70.

Of these, 25 are maximum scholars, and two or three others have the same standing in their studies, but not to their rank. The names of all the max. um scholars will be given by Mr. Bartlett after the reading of the other reports.

The Committee are happy to express their full satisfaction in the kindness and faithfulness of the instructor, Mr. Osborn, and their cordial approbation of the method of instruction which he has pursued. The examinations have been made under the direct control of the Committee, and have been conducted either by them personally, or by the teacher under their direction, so that the fullest opportunity has been afforded of testing the thoroughness of the course of instruction, and the proficiency of the pupils.

The first object has evidently aimed at thoroughness in all his teaching. He has endeavored to secure to his pupils a perfect knowledge of first principles and fundamental rules, before proceeding to their more difficult applications, thus as it should be. A radical defect in many schools is that an attempt is made to occupy too much ground. The pupil is carried over a great deal of ground, but of a little well, and defective, we think College Hill has hitherto avoided, or at least, thoroughness has been the first aim, the pupils are generally well grounded, and no matches could have been applied.

The class in Natural Philosophy, under the care of Mr. Worthy, passed a most satisfactory examination, as Mr. Worthy's classes always do.

The Committee take great pleasure in saying they have been highly gratified with the examination under their immediate supervision, as well as with the general order and discipline of the school. It was done most creditably and heartily commend this institution as deserving the entire confidence of the friends of education, and the large patronage which it enjoys. The College Hill School ought always to be full.

Poughkeepsie, Oct. 1856.

The undersigned, a Committee appointed to examine the pupils pursuing Classical studies in the Poughkeepsie Collegiate School, report:

That after having been assiduously engaged for two days in the discharge of the duties assigned them, they can unanimously and cheerfully say that the results of the examination have been in a high degree satisfactory.

In these results have been clearly manifested great zeal and untiring exertion on the part of the instructors, and close attention and successful industry on the part of a large majority of the pupils.

The system of instruction employed by the teachers in this department met with the decided approbation of the Committee.

The Committee were especially gratified at the marked attention paid to Grammar and the principles of construction, and would particularly take notice of the success of the teachers in translating the rules of Prosody.

The Committee do not feel themselves called upon to particularize the standing of individual students, as that will be publicly done by the Principal.

The Committee cannot conclude their report without again repeating their entire satisfaction with the manner in which Classical studies are conducted in the Poughkeepsie Collegiate School. WM H CROSBY, Chairman.

College Hill, Oct. 2, 1856.

To CHARLES BARTLETT, Esq

Your Committee appointed to examine the classes in History, Rhetoric, Composition and Moral Philosophy, report:

That they have attended to the duty assigned them. They cannot avoid the conviction that, owing to the attention which has been made at the close of this term, in the method of examination, by dividing the Committees and distributing the classes among them, there has been the most thorough examination ever witnessed upon College Hill. It has certainly given to the examiners a far better opportunity of becoming acquainted with the proficiency of the pupils and the efficiency of their instructors.

The result has been the deepest conviction, that your School deserves the patronage it has hitherto received. It were indeed surprising if an institution which has for its instructors no less than five or six men, educated at an American or European University, and whose Principal spares neither pains nor expense in his efforts to impart a thorough education, should sustain any other than the highest literary character, or fail to receive the patronage of an enlightened community.

The classes examined by us are all under the tuition of Professor Naline, and have evinced a very commendable degree of diligence.

Their extensive acquaintance with History, ancient and modern, and their accurate knowledge of the principles of Rhetoric, gratified your Committee much, but we would do injustice to your school as well as ourselves, if we did not in an especial manner express our great delight in the examination of the class in Moral Philosophy. The young gentlemen of this department proved, by the promptness and general correctness with which they answered the questions, that they had entered not only into the very spirit of the instructor, but of the subject itself.

We will add, that the style of the compositions reveals clearly that there is no abatement in the interest which has for some years characterized this branch of liberal education; and that we think the plan of publishing a monthly periodical—the College Hill Mercury—and permitting the scholars to deliver their own compositions at your Commencement, are well calculated to inspire it.

We are happy to unite with the other members of the General Committee, to congratulating ourself and your worthy colleagues on the felicitous results of your and our labors. H. G. LUDLOW, } Com.
CHAS. WHITEHEAD, }

The Examining Committee for the department of Modern Languages, having attended to the duties assigned them, report:

That the whole number of pupils belonging to this Department is eighty.

Of these, thirty-eight have received instruction in the French language from Mr. Aweng, now for many years a faithful and successful teacher on College Hill. His classes were given over into the hands of the Committee, and examined in French Reading and Composition, in translations from and into the language—particular attention being paid to its pronunciation, phraseology, and grammatical construction; and in the first of these, moreover, being examined upon portions of their text-books not previously studied. And, although in so large a number there must be a very great diversity in respect to ability and application, whilst no care or faithfulness in the teacher could compensate for incapacity, nor was the present examination in some cases proved for indolence or inattention in the pupils, yet ample evidence was afforded of the former's untiring, and in a large measure, successful labors.

The primary class in French, consisting of eighteen members, also gave full evidence of thorough instruction in the text of their teacher, Rev. M. Schirmer, who likewise has had charge of a similar class in German. The Committee, having to consider the time devoted to this language during the present term, have reason to be satisfied with the progress made, with one or two exceptions.

The Spanish classes, numbering fourteen, and in charge of Dr. Dan, were found to have made satisfactory progress, their fluent pronunciation and orthographical correctness deserving especial notice.

The Committee thus conclude their Report, to which, however, they beg leave to add an expression of their conviction that—apart from the drawbacks before noticed—it might have been, and might always be, much more favorable if the impatience of both parent and pupils to see rapid results, were more generally controlled by the maxim that thoroughness, not rapidity, should be the great object in all educational pursuits. TO SHIPPERS.—The undersigned are prepared to supply shippers with corn meal, corn flour, and corn farina, manufactured and dried by Stafford's Patent Process at the Atlantic Dock Mills, Brooklyn. The above articles will be warranted to be manufactured from the best quality of pure yellow or pure white Indian corn, and to withstand the effect of climate and sea voyages. During the past four years the undersigned have sold and shipped considerable quantities of corn meal dried by Stafford's Process. The prices obtained abroad, and the keeping and other qualities of the meal, have proved its superiority to kiln dried meal of any brand. All grains, flour and meal, dried by Stafford's Process retain the color and flavor of the natural grains. ALLEN & WHITTLESEY,
21 South-st.

TO HOME CONSUMERS OF INDIAN CORN—Stafford's process of manufacturing and drying Corn Meal, Corn Flour and Corn Farina, leaves all the particles of the grain granular, and expels the moisture without changing the color or flavor of the articles manufactured, rendering these articles much more nutritious than when manufactured from grain which contains the natural moisture, or from grain which has been kiln dried.
