my24 2t WESLEY SMITH, Committee.

☞ The Five Points Mission.—As several articles have appeared in the various papers respecting this mission, which seem to involve some contradiction, the Ladies Home Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, under whose auspices it was established, and by whose funds its missionary has been sustained, deem it best to make some explanations. The field of this Society's operations is within the city proper, and its immediate suburbs, and during the eight years of its existence, many flourishing missions have been established. For several years their attention was turned to the Five Points, but no opening seemed to present. Last May they concluded to make the effort, though all was dark before them, and applied to the Conference then in session, for a missionary to labor in that field. The Bishop granted their request, (they pledging themselves for his support,) and appointed the Rev. L. H. Pease. In connection with a number of gentlemen who had been chosen by the ladies as Advisory Committee to the Board, he rented the Mission Room, at the corner of Little-Water and Cross streets, and commenced his labors. With his success the public have already been informed, and the result of his energetic efforts can be witnessed at any time by those interested in this mission. Mr. Pease immediately found that the fearful prevalence of intemperance was a complete barrier to the success of all efforts for their spiritual good—that the temperance cause must be the basis of all improvement. He therefore turned his attention to this point, and soon realized that all efforts would prove abortive, unless the miserable victims, when rescued, could be furnished with employment. This led to the establishment of the work-room, &c., so enlarging Mr. Pease's responsibilities and duties, that it became impossible for him ever to supervise the mission in all its aspects. At this point, the National Temperance Society, who had been deeply interested in the movement, came forward and offered to take the whole temporal part of the establishment under their care; and, judging that Mr. Pease's peculiar qualifications for that work had been fully tested, desired him to become their agent. Application was made to the New-York Conference, then in session, and the Bishop consented that Mr. Pease should take that appointment. The Ladies' Society applied for another missionary, to preach and visit and pray with the people; and the Rev. John Luckey, late Chaplain of the Sing-Sing State Prison, was appointed—a man every way qualified for that arduous work, and familiar with the ground and the inhabitants. It will thus be seen that two distinct organizations exist, each aiming to benefit that degraded population, but perfectly separate in their arrangements—one under the supervision of the National Temperance Society—the other connected with the Ladies' Home Missionary Society of the M. E. Church. The Industrial Home of the Institute will be Mr. Pease's department—the Sunday School, preaching and pastoral visitation, Mr. Luckey's. In such a field there is room for all to work, and the Society hope largely for the success of future efforts. Everything connected with the mission is flourishing. It has been sustained beyond our most sanguine hopes, and we again commend it to public interest and public care, without one anxious fear that our appeal will be in vain.
