THE INTERVIEW

By AGNES GRAHAM BROGAN

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

Geraldine Humphreys May had been interested and remarkably helpful in promoting child welfare, instituting leagues and working tirelessly herself in the lower parts of great cities. But her name did not become famous until she had, understandingly, written personal stories of various small foreign subjects. There was about Geraldine May's stories the charm of sincerity. One could almost see the pleading eyes of Pauline Triviski as one read the tragic story of the child's life, and one could laugh over the escapades of Tiny Tony Magneno.

Geraldine Humphreys May was entitled to her fame. But newspaper men found her a difficult person in the matter of interviews. Club women all over the country were clamoring to hear this clever woman's views on certain vital questions, anxious to see her picture, to know something of her personality. In vain Miss May declined to be published in magazines, determinedly she refused all ambitious newspaper reporters.

And because of this the Daily Herald was more than anxious to make that conquest, so it was decided to send Bill Hampton out for the Geraldine May story.

He just went after his interview and got it. Everybody liked Bill. "The High Brow," as the office force jeeringly referred to the difficult lady, was known to be stopping at a secluded inn on the Hudson. When Bill reached the adjoining village he learned that Miss May and her niece occupied an apartment at the rear of the beautiful summer lodge, and that Miss Geraldine May might be seen every morning walking in the rear gardens, while her niece camped on a high garden wall and watched for invaders.

Upon the approach of a stranger, the niece referred to as "Gerry," would slip down from the wall to give her aunt warning to retire.

Bill intended to waylay the niece herself upon one of her afternoon walks and endeavor to win her over to intercede for him. Miss Gerry May usually spent her afternoons with book or sewing on a bench-tree set back from the road. So Bill Hampton found her. As he was always frank in his methods, he presented to her his card with explanation.

But she shook her head at him. "It's no use," she said, "Miss May could not be persuaded to see you. She will not talk for publication. She is busy most of the time now with her new book of stories. I don't blame her for not wanting to be bothered."

"But you see," explained Billy dolefully—"he had seated himself at Miss Gerry's side—"this thing would mean a big scoop for me. And I'm after fame too, by way of advancement in my business. I sure do work hard for that. And if your aunt refuses to see me, couldn't you act as a sort of interpreter—get her to tell you her views and all that?"

Gerry laid down her sewing and considered the eager yet humble young man before her.

"Why," she asked slowly, "would it be, as you say, a great scoop for you? Would it really help you out in your profession?"

Bill seized his advantage. "Your aunt has always been charitably inclined," he suggested. "I am sure the old lady has a kind heart. And while I am not exactly on the lowest step of the newspaper ladder—" Bill paused, then his eyes lightened in anticipation, "it certainly would be a big thing for me," he said. "Well, go on with your questions," she invited, "I'll take a chance on answering."

His glance was grateful but disappointed. He hated to hurt the feelings of this obliging little creature, but Gerry's interpretation of her cultured aunt's views would, he realized, scarcely measure up to the reputation of that unusual woman.

"Couldn't you," he stammered, "get her to write out the statement for you—a statement ready for publication?"

The niece's eyes met his, brown eyes, sadly reproachful, then suddenly laughing eyes with golden lights in their depths. Bill's heart fluttered and the fluttering was not at all unpleasant. The girl laughed and then Bill laughed too; a laugh of pure enjoyment in life and his surroundings, a happy laugh in the companionship of this witching girl, whose fathomless eyes held and thrilled him strangely.

"No," the girl answered his question, "I could not get Miss May to write out a statement for publication, for you see, it's much easier to talk. I, myself, happen to be that hunted-down writer. And as you kindly suggest, being also a charitably inclined and kind-hearted old lady, I will help you with your scoop."

Bill Hampton stared.

"But," he began, then halted incredulously.

"Aunt Geraldine Humphreys May for whom I am named," Gerry patiently explained, "chaperones me about wherever I go; and I can talk intelligently upon the subject of child welfare," she added, "being vitally interested."

So Bill confusedly got out his pencil.

"Did you get the high brow?" the boys at the office asked him, but he did not hear their question. He was wondering how he would be able to get his work out of the way tomorrow in order to catch the 1:30 out to Hudson View Inn.

Bae Piere Brookhart coming to the Keith Theatre Wednesday as head liner this week is described as the wonder man of the twentieth century. It was Brookhart who predicted the World War a Winnipeg long before it started and returned there during the conflict predicting its end. He gives the most remarkable demonstration of mental telepathy and predicts the future in love, business and other affairs while reading the past. The questions to be answered, not written down or even told to an assistant but simply thought by the inquirer. At his birth he was christened Bae by Chief White Eagle, meaning A Great Light. At the age of six he astounded all by marvelous psychological powers. At seventeen he was recognized as one of the world's greatest mentalists. He not only mystifies but astounds. Do not miss the chance to see this wonderful person.
