WATTS'S NERVOUS ANTIDOTE. A CONCLUSION.—That if some hundredth part as much had been said and proved upon any other subject, science, or discovery, the whole world would have been convinced of its truth before now. But as this can only interest the deceased and debilitated, it proves the sad and lamentable fact, that the mind becomes enfeebled under the sufferings of the body; for what would carry conviction in any other case, is read by them with doubt, and the debilitated, nervous and consumptive die in doubt, instead of taking Watts's Nervous Antidote and live. It has never once failed; it is as settled a fact as steam or telegraph, that it changes the fluids of the brain, and must exterminate disease. Depot 102 Nassau-st. au23
