TO INVENTORS.—A gentleman, with a Capital of between $3,000 and $10,000, desires to purchase a Patent Right, or an interest in one. He prefers an article that would retail at from 12½ cents to $1, and that would be in nearly universal demand; but he does not refuse to listen to propositions from Patentees of more costly articles.

The advertiser flatters himself that his qualifications and experience enable him to push an article of real value about as well as most men; and he has, at present, more than ordinary facilities for so doing; but he declines exposing himself to the liability to lose time in "protracted meetings," or even in a single interview, with a person who will not first favor him with a written description of his invention, that the advertiser may, at once see if it be a thing that he would like to be connected with, under any circumstances. Persons who have not yet obtained a Patent, or filed a Caveat, and who may, therefore, be presumed to be somewhat delicate about stating, exactly, and in detail, what their inventions are, can nevertheless, if they be sharp, give such an idea of them as will satisfy the advertiser, without exposing their secret. Address, post-paid, N. D. H., Tribune Office. o7 2t*
