THE DAILY EMPIRE.

The Printer and his Type.

The following beautiful extract is from the pen of Bayard Taylor, the printer traveler:

"Perhaps there is no department of enterprise whose details are less understood by intelligent people than the "art preservative"—the achievement of types.

Every day, their life long, they are accustomed to read the newspapers, to find fault with its statements, its arrangements, its looks; to plume themselves upon the discovery of some roughish and acrobatic type that gets into a frolic and stands upon its head; or of some waste letter or two in it—but of the process by which the newspaper is made, of the myriads of motions and thousands of places necessary to its composition, they know little and think less.

They imagine they discourse of a wonder, indeed, when they speak of the fair white carpet woven for thought to walk on, of the rags that fluttered upon the back of the beggar yesterday.

But there is something more wonderful still. When we look at the hundred and fifty-two little boxes, somewhat shaded with the touch of inky fingers, that compose the printer's case, motionless, except the clicking of the types, as one by one they take their places in growing line—we think we have found the marvel of the art.

We think how many fancies in fragments there are in the boxes, how many atoms of poetry and eloquence the printer can make here and there, if he only has a little chart to work by, how many facts in a small handfull, how much truth in chaos.

Now he picks up the scattered elements until he holds in his hand a stanza of Grey's Elegy, or a monody upon Grimes, "all buttoned up before." Now he "sets" a "puppy missing," and now "Paradise Lost;" he carrys a bride in "small cars," and a comet in "nonpareil;" he announces that the languishing "five," in one sentence—disposes the word and deplores the days that are few and "evil," in the next.

A poor lost ticks its way slowly into the printer's hand, like a clock just running down, and a strain of eloquence marches into line letter by letter. We fancy we can tell the difference by hearing of the ear but perhaps not.

The types that told a wedding yesterday, announce a burial to morrow—perhaps to the self-same letters.

They are the elements to make a world of—those types are, a world with something in it as beautiful as spring, as rich as summer, and as grand as autumn flowers that frost can not wilt, fruit that shall ripen for all time.

The newspaper has become the log book of the age; it tells at what rate the world is running; we cannot find our "reckoning" without it.

True, the green grocer may bundle up a pound of candles in our best expressed thoughts, but it is only coming to base uses, as its betters have done time immemorable.

We console ourselves by thinking that one can make of that newspaper what he cannot make of living oak—a bridge for time, that he can fling it over the chasm of the dead years and walk safely back upon the shadowy sea into the far Past. The singer shall not end his song, nor the true soul be eloquent no more.

The realms of the Press is enchanted ground. Sometimes the editor has the happiness of knowing that he has defended the right, exposed the wrong, protected the weak; that he has given utterance to a sentiment that has cheered somebody's solitary hour, made somebody happier, kindled a smile upon a sad face, or hope on a heavy heart.

He may meet with that sentiment many years after it may have lost all traces of its paternity, but he feels a affection for it. He welcomes it as a long absent child. He reads it as for the first time, and wonders if indeed he wrote it, for he has changed since then. Perhaps he could not give utterance to the sentiment now—perhaps he would not if he could.

It seems like the voice of his former self calling to its parent, and there is something mournful in its tone. He begins to think—to remember why he wrote it—where, were his readers then, and whether they have gone—what he was then, and how much he has changed. So he muses, until he finds himself wondering if that thought of his will continue to float after he is dead and whether he is really looking upon something that will survive him. And then comes the sweet consciousness that there is nothing in the sentence that he could wish unwritten—that it is a better part of him—a shred from the garment of immortality he shall leave behind him when he joins the "innumerable caravan," and takes his place in the silent halls of death.

An amusing debate took place between Mr. W., a skeptic on religious matters, and a German Lutheran. The skeptic ridiculing the truth of certain passages in the Bible, and supposing his antagonist about cornered in argument, asked him if he believed Balaam's ass ever spoke like a man. The Lutheran was silent for a moment, and then said: "Me read mit the Bible dat von Balaam beat his schackass, and she speke chust like a man. Me believes dat. Me never hear a schackass speke like a man myself, but me hear a good many man speke chust like a schackass."

A terrible explosion took place in London, England, on the 31st ult. The gasometer of the London Gas Company, fully charged with gas, suddenly exploded, tearing to atoms several large buildings so completely that not one brick was left standing upon another. People nearly a mile off were violently thrown down, so severe was the shock. Thirty men were taken from the ruins, nine of whom were dead and the remainder in a precarious condition.

A Salt Lake City correspondent of the New York Times confirms the previous reports that the Mormons are arming, and will fight for polygamy, which is the only article of faith which they much care for. The writer says that he believes South Carolina was more loyal in the spring of 1861 than Utah is at the present time.

An exchange gives reasons for not publishing a poetic effusion, as follows: "The rhythm sounds like jumping rolling over a hard floor, while some lines appear to have been measured with a yard-stick, and others with a ten-foot pole."

Some of our religious exchanges tell a story about a woman being relieved from speechless grief by a hymn. We have known a number of the sex to be strongly affected and greatly benefited by hims before this.

A tall fellow, standing in the parquette of a theatre, was repeatedly desired to sit down, but would not; when a voice from the second circle called out, "Let him alone; he's a tailor, and he's resting himself!"

The young fellow who went on a bridal tour with an angel in muslin has returned with a termagant in hoops.

At a young lady's seminary recently, during an examination in history one of the not most promising pupils was interrogated thus: "Mary, did Martin Luther die a natural death?" "No," was the reply, "he was excommunicated by a bull."

The Richmond Times says of waterfalls: "We have watched these phenomena carefully, and they have been growing larger every Sunday, and the tails of the horses of the young ladies' papas are growing smaller."

A Mountain of Salt.—A striking curiosity has lately been discovered in the Nevada Territory. It is a mountain of rock salt situated about twenty miles from Meadow Valley, and only eighteen miles from the head of navigation on the Colorado River. It rises abruptly from the plain, about four hundred feet in hight, a mountain of pure, sparkling crystallized salt.

Every young man is eagerly asking the best way of getting on in life. The Bible gives a very short answer to the question: "Walk in the way of good men, and keep the paths of the righteous." A great many books of advice and direction have been written, but here is the gist of them all.

The Governess.—In Russia this most useful class of females are held in such respect that the governess is led forth as an honored guest, taking precedence of the pupils whose education she is conducting. It is a shameful truth that in England and this country their position is not above that of ladies' maids.

A way-speaking of the cruel treatment of a child by its mother, says: "The child certainly should have the careful attention of some one, or it will be prematurely added to the kingdom of heaven, and, thus, perhaps, permanently separated from its kindred."

A little girl, four years old, was on her way home from church with her father when they passed a boy splitting wood, and the father remarked, "Mary, do you see that boy breaking the Sabbath?" The child made no reply, but walked home very thoughtfully, and meeting her mother, exclaimed, "Oh, mother, I saw a boy breaking the Sabbath with a big axe!"

Among all the contrivances of men to protect the family circle from want, none can be found more simple in its character, noble in its features, or certain in its results, than Life Insurance. It is the prop which the dying husband leaves to

WIFE OF HIS BOSOM.

It is the succor hand of the provident father, reaching forth from the grave, and still nourishing his offspring, and keeping together the family. By it, the father

SON PROTECTS HIS AGED PARENTS

Even where he has preceded them into eternity, by it the honest debtor satisfies his confiding creditor, when late seemed least propitious. In a moral and worldly sense, it is one great weapon by which to rob death of its sting.

Let any husband, father, son, ask himself,

"If I was to Die To-Night, Would those who are dear to me be safe from the Pangs of Want?"

Would these children have a comfortable home, and the means of education? Would this wife be independent of the cold charities of the world? Would this aged and feeble parent be provided for? Would my estate pay my debts? Would there be no sacrifice of property by forced sales of an administrator to meet demands of creditors—sales made when the market tends downward, and fair prices cannot be realized? Now he can answer these question to their satisfaction! They fear to ask them, and cherish the belief that they have a long lease on life. This is both foolish and cowardly.

The Brave Man Looks

DANGER IN THE FACE.

That he may grapple with it, the wise man, that he may study its nature and palliate its threatening. The means of palliation are at hand, of easy access to all.

—IT IS—

LIFE INSURANCE!

YOUNG MEN

Just starting in business, whose chief capital is their energy and integrity, should secure their lives to the amount of half their liabilities. Such an act of disinterested honesty when known to their creditors, would justly increase their confidence in them.

IT WOULD SHOW.

That they did not wish to leave their best friends exposed to any avoidable contingency, and the

ANNUAL PREMIUM

Might fairly be regarded as the trifle which an upright heart pays at the shrine of justice.
