HARPER & BROTHERS, No. 329 Pearl-st., Franklin-square, publish This Day:

I. BLEAK HOUSE. By Charles Dickens. With Illustrations by H. K. Browne. Part II., 12mo., paper, 12½ cents.

The first sheets of "Bleak House" have the clear ring of the true metal. The book, it is clear, is to be full of characters, full of incidents, full of humor, pathos and power, all marshaled with the utmost skill of this great master, to make odious in the sight of heaven and of earth, that "most pestilent of hoary sinners," the English High Court of Chancery. [Times.

The opening of the story is full of promise. One devours this number at a sitting, and, like Oliver, "asks for more." [N. Y. Independent.

It opens rich, and bids fair to take precedence of any of its author's productions. [Boston Times.

The characters are marked, such as Dickens only can portray, and the work promises to be ranked with his best. [Wore. Palladium.

The first forty-eight pages come fully up to the mark, and give abundant indications that this work is to be one of great and exciting interest. [Lowell Journal.

With Maps and Engravings. 12mo., muslin, 75 cents per volume. The volumes may be obtained separately.

He has more learning than Scott; more critical decision than Henry; more spiritual discernment than Whitby; more copiousness than Benson; and more judgment than Gill. He affords precisely the aid which an English reader requires when seeking to ascertain the exact sense of obscure passages; and these "Notes" will, in my opinion, render essential aid to the cause of religion. [Extract from a letter of Hon. and Rev. Baptist W. Noel, M. A.
